Dear John,
I enclose a letter from New York State (the city is, I suppose, too broke to go in for such enquiries) which, perhaps, you can help me to answer!

The Canhamian has only a very brief mention of the excavations of 1963 & none of the alleged ones of 1962. It has some brief reports to be. Unfortunately, if any records of the dig were kept, they have not survived at the school. I'd guess that any objects found would have been kept by the Pinhorns. Anyway, if your extensive local knowledge can throw light on any of this I'd be grateful to pass it on.

On quite a different matter:
Stephen Baku (at the University - I expect you know ~~of~~ him?) is researching the architecture of Bifrons, & I'd ask you, when writing about

Bridge Place, whether you know of any paintings, plans, descriptions etc. with a bearing on this research. He knows, of course, of the Dutch (the name escapes me - must name do these days) 17th century painting that was reproduced not so long ago.

I hope you are all well - kindest regards

from
Paul Pollak
