

as Robert son of Robert de Septvans. Now the third of that name of the Septvans family, according to Mr. Planché (History of Ash-nerst-Sunder), died Ao. 33 Hen. III (1249), his son and heir nearly forty years of age. Robert IV survived his father only four years, dying Ao. 37 Hen. III. It was found by Inquisition that he left a wife, and a son and heir, Robert, aged only nine. Robert, the fifth of that Christian name, attained the majority in due course (Ao. 49 Hen. III), distinguished himself in the wars, received the office of knighthood—and dying in the same year of a gallant sovereign (Ao. 34 Edw. I), was succeeded in the estates of the Septvans by his son, William.

Owing to want of knowledge on the part of the transcribers as to the topography of the district, and other particulars, the text of the transcript printed will be found to be more or less erroneous in many places. But I have inserted (between square brackets, and in italics) here and there, where it seemed essential, or advisable, what I deem to have been the original reading of names of persons and places. For facility of reference every entry has been lettered, and I purpose making the series of entries already referred to, correspond with this number.
