

DRAFT

Walter Braems died 1692; cart of Grave Bridge Place so impoverished wisest that they had to sell it - to son Taylor of Bifrons ~1704 who soon afterwards pulled down the greater part (any of one wing standing, but still by rest enough to be sufficient for a gentleman. John Taylor died 1729 + passed down to Edward Taylor who also own Bifrons because = Great White Barches = 1500 John Taylor bought it from Smith + Watson.

BARGRAVE GENEALOGY

-John BARGRAVE (†<1585) of Bridge

=Alice KENNARD; she remarried John LUKYN of Fordwich in 1584

-Robert (*~1540; will proved 1600) of Bridge; yeoman farmer and tanner

=1.2.1568 Joannah GILBERT (†12.1598); daughter of John GILBERT of Sandwich

-John (*early 1570s; †~1625); matriculated Clare College, Cambridge 1588; <sup>1</sup> granted arms 9.1611; built Bifrons <1618; owner of the ship Edwin<sup>2</sup>

=1597 Jane CROUCH, daughter and co-heir of Giles CROUCH, armigerous haberdasher, of Cornhill, London

-Robert (*1600); naval captain

= 1635, in Canterbury Cathedral, Elizabeth PEYTON; <sup>3</sup> daughter of Sir Samuel PEYTON

-John (†<1670)

= Frances TURNER of London

-Thomas

-Isaac

-Elizabeth

=1684 John FULLAGER of Langley, Kent

-Jane

-Robert (†~1697); of Doctors' Commons

=Sarah

-Elizabeth

=1715 Benjamin COADE of London

-Joan

=1627, at Patricbourne, Thomas RAYMOND; doctor of divinity

-John, who went on a Grand Tour with his uncle John Bargrave in 1646-1647 and published an account of it in 1648

=Mr. HUSSEY; doctor of divinity

-Jane (*1608)

=Lodowick WEEMYS; doctor of divinity; Prebend of Westminster

-Anne (*~1615; † in infancy)

-Sarah (*1613)

=Partridge LINCOLN of Lincolnshire

<sup>263.</sup> -John (%18.11.1610, Nonington; †11.5.1680; ↓ at the entrance to the Martyrdom, Canterbury Cathedral); <sup>4</sup> sold Bifrons 1661<sup>5</sup>; moved to Canterbury Cathedral (✓childless). FRANCES OSBORNE nee WILDE

-Thomas (†1621, Virginia); clergyman, presented to the living of Eythorne and later Sevington

-Richard; 1598-1601 scholar at The King's School, Canterbury; soldier

=?

-Alice (*1615)

-Jane (*1619)

-Robert (†1649, aged 65); portrait recorded as having been hung in the chancel of Bridge church

=Mrs. WOOD; widow

Stephen Becheyn 1756

- Stephen Becheyn 1756

*= Mary Sandridge d. of the late John J. Sandridge
- of daughter of George Sandridge
= Catherine Carset d. of Dr John Carset of Shropshire*

*Manor of Anne Place
John, Lord Viscount Hinchinbrook*

*- Charlotte
- Catherine
- Mr Grey
- John Charles, Recd, Rectory of Upper Hedges*

*LLB 17
by Act of Parliament 1771
His daughter Mgr = Edw 1*

DRAFT

BARGRAVE GENEALOGY

There was a Thomas Bargrave,
Cheshelwode or St Michaels
Hasledean - 1502

-John BARGRAVE (†<1585) of Bridge

=Alice KENNARD; she remarried John LUKYN of Fordwich in 1584

-Robert (*~1540; will proved 1600) of Bridge; yeoman farmer and tanner

=1.2.1568 Joannah GILBERT (†12.1598); daughter of John GILBERT of Sandwich

-John (*early 1570s; †~1625); matriculated Clare College, Cambridge 1588;<sup>1</sup> granted arms 9.1611; built Bifrons <1618; owner of the ship Edwin<sup>2</sup>

=1597 Jane CROUCH, daughter and co-heir of Giles CROUCH, armigerous haberdasher, of Cornhill, London

-Robert (*1600); naval captain

= 1635, in Canterbury Cathedral, Elizabeth PEYTON;<sup>3</sup> daughter of Sir Samuel PEYTON

-John (†<1670)

= Frances TURNER of London

-Thomas

-Isaac

-Elizabeth

=1684 John FULLAGER of Langley, Kent

-Jane

-Robert (†~1697); of Doctors' Commons

=Sarah

-Elizabeth

=1715 Benjamin COADE of London

-Joan

= Thomas RAYMOND; doctor of divinity

-John, who went on a Grand Tour with his uncle John Bargrave in 1646-1647 and published an account of it in 1648

=Mr. HUSSEY; doctor of divinity

-Jane (*1608)

=Lodowick WEEMYS; doctor of divinity; Prebend of Westminster

-Anne (*~1615; †in infancy)

-Sarah (*1613)

=Partridge LINCOLN of Lincolnshire

-John (%18.11.1610, Nonington; †11.5.1680, aged 70; ↓ at the entrance to the Martyrdom, Canterbury Cathedral);<sup>4</sup> sold Bifrons 1661<sup>5</sup>

= Frances WILD (†1686); daughter of Sir John WILD

John (†1625) ↓ 25.7.1625, Cant cathedral

-Thomas (†1621, Virginia); clergyman, presented to the living of Eythorne and later Sevington

-Richard; 1598-1601 scholar at The King's School, Canterbury; soldier

=?

-Alice (*1615)

-Jane (*1619)

-Robert (†1649, aged 65); portrait recorded as having been hung in the chancel of Bridge church

John (senior) KS 1631-34
Thomas (junior) KS 1631-32

She prebend is now "Lincolnton"

a pupil of this senior was at KS

1686 Frances OSBORNE, widow, a girl from Winton

She died
†1686

next page

DRAFT

Tablet N Wall of Lady Chapel

Cathedral<sup>6</sup>

=Mrs. WOOD; widow
 =1644 Margaret COVENEY
 -George (*1586)
 =Dorcas MARTIN, daughter of John MARTIN
 -Isaac (†1.164<sup>2</sup>/<sub>3</sub>, aged 56); B.A. Pembroke College, Cambridge 1606-7; vicar of Eythorne 1614; D.D. Clare College, Cambridge, 1621; Dean of Canterbury

or Benjamin Nelbush
 =1.10.1618 Elizabeth DERING (†1667, aged 74); daughter of John DERING of Egerton and his wife Elizabeth, the sister of Edward, 1st Lord WOTTON

-Anne (*~1619)
 =1636 Thomas COPPIN
 =>12.1643 Sir Henry PALMER

-Edward (†young)
 -Thomas (*~1620; †<1.1660); of Eastry Court KS 1634-40
 =>12.1642 Honora ESTCOTT (†1682) who remarried after 1.1660 Joseph ROBERTS of Canterbury

pp => =A niece of Sir Henry Wotton Thomas was exor of Sir H. W.'s will.

-Thomas (%1653)
 -Charles (%1651; †1713) of Eastry Court
 =Elizabeth WITHWICK (†1732)

-Isaac (*1680; †1727); of Eastry Court
 =Christian LEIGH (*1698; †1772); daughter of Sir Francis LEIGH of Hawley
 -Isaac (*1721; †24.5.1800); of Eastry Court; eminent solicitor in London
 =1751 Sarah LYNCH (†1780); daughter of George LYNCH, M.D. (†1787)

-Christian (*~1734; †~1774)
 =Rev. Claudius CLARE of Hythe
 -Christian (*1751; †26.9.1806)
 =at Hythe, Robert TOURNAY (†19.5.1825) of Brockhull, Saltwood and afterwards Eastry Court<sup>7</sup>
 =Robert KIRK; Captain in the Royal Navy

-Frances
 =John BROADLEY (†1784)

-Charles
 =Sarah AUSTEN; of the Isle of Sheppey 2.7. 4. 3. 2

-Robert (†17.12.1779, aged 84; ↓Eastry church)
 =5.1733 Elizabeth LEIGH (†1737); daughter of Sir Francis LEIGH of Hawley
 -Robert (†14.2.1774; aged 39); a Procter in Doctors' Commons
 =Rebecca RUDD (†2.11.1795, Deal); daughter of Dr. RUDD, Vicar of Westwell
 -Rebecca

=John WYBORN of Hule, near Sholden
 =1753 Elizabeth BASSETT
 -Elizabeth (*1678, Eastry)
 =1702 Edward ST. LEGER (*1665, Maidstone; †1729, Great Mongeham);<sup>8</sup> surgeon, of Deal

-Honora

- John d. 1625

DRAFT

=1660 Charles KNOWLER
=Joseph ROBERTS
|-Martha
=1714 Zouch PILCHER
|-Hester
=William BRIDGES; of Sandwich
|-Mary
=David DENNE
|-Isaac (†1626, young; ↓Canterbury Cathedral) ↓ 18.11.1626
|-Robert (*1628; †1661, İzmir; ↓St. Veneranda Cemetery, İzmir) KS 1642
=1653 Elizabeth TURNER (*1632; †1703; ↓Kensington); only daughter of Robert TURNER of Canterbury
|-Robert (*25.8.1654; ↓28.8.1659, Canterbury Cathedral)
|-Hester (*1.1657; ↓East Malling)
=5.2.1680, in Canterbury Cathedral, Francis TURNER of London
|-Elizabeth (*~1659)
=Mr. TUCKWELL of London
|-Isaac (%14.8.1660, Canterbury Cathedral; †10.7.1663; Canterbury Cathedral)
|-Mary (*1629)
=John SMITH
|-Jane (†1630; ↓Canterbury Cathedral) ↓ 23.7.1630
|-Hester (*1632)
=Francis NOWERS
|-Elizabeth (*1635)
=Edward WILSFORD
|-Henry (*1636; †1637)
|-Anne ↓ 8.1.1637
=Robert NAYLOR
|-Alice
=Robert TOURNAY of Sturry
|-Angela (↓13.11.1645, Canterbury Cathedral)
=4.10.1604 John BOYS (*1571, Eythorne; †30.9.1625)<sup>9</sup>; Dean of Canterbury Cathedral 3.5.1619;<sup>10</sup> Fellow of Clare College, Cambridge 1592

<sup>1</sup> Admitted to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn 7.11.1590;

<sup>2</sup> This ship was recorded on 4.5.1618 as being involved in the trade with Virginia. James Brett of London was the master.

<sup>3</sup> Sister of Sir Thomas PEYTON (†1684; ↓Westminster Abbey) of Knowlton Court

<sup>4</sup> Doctor of divinity; Canon in the 5th prebend of Canterbury 26.9.1662; matriculated Peterhouse; Vicar of Smarden and rector of Harbledown.

<sup>5</sup> The sale to Sir Arthur Slingsby was arranged by Sir Samuel PEYTON; however, Bifrons was already the family home of Sir Guilford Slingsby so these details need confirmation.

<sup>6</sup> Seized by Parliamentary forces at Gravesend 8.1642 and imprisoned for 3 weeks in the Fleet without trial or being charged.

See Brenner article for detls + more
King's School 1623-26
See the part to King's School for a few details

DRAFT

---

<sup>7</sup> Took the surname and arms of BARGRAVE in addition to those of TOURNAY by Royal Sign Manual dated 23.8.1800

<sup>8</sup> Son of Dudley ST. LEGER (*1639;†1700) and Winnifred HORNE of Deal.

<sup>9</sup> Son of Thomas BOYS of Eythorne and his wife Christian SEARLES, daughter and co-heir of John SEARLES of Wye.

<sup>10</sup> Rector of Betteshanger.

BARGRAVE FAMILY GENEALOGY

-John BARGRAVE of Bridge

=Alice KENNARD; she remarried John LUKYN of Fordwich in 1584

-Robert

=1568 Joannah GILBERT (†12.1598); daughter of John GILBERT of Sandwich

-Richard

=?

-Alice (*1615)

-Jane (*1619)

-John; builder of Bifrons

= Jane CROUCH, daughter and co-heir of Giles CROUCH of London

-Robert (*1605)

= 1635 Elizabeth PEYTON; daughter of Sir Samuel PEYTON

-John; sold Bifrons

= Francis TURNER of London

-Thomas

-Isaac

-Elizabeth

=1684 John FULLAGER of Langley, Kent

-Jane

-Robert of Doctors' Commons

= Sarah

-Elizabeth

=1715 Benjamin COADE of London

-Joan

=Mr. RAYMOND; doctor of divinity

=Mr. HUSSEY; doctor of divinity

-Jane (*1608)

=Lodowick WEEMYS; doctor of divinity; Prebend of Westminster

-Anne (†in infancy)

-Sarah (*1613)

=Partridge LINCOLN of Lincolnshire

-John (†1680); doctor of divinity; Prebend of Canterbury; Vicar of Smarden and Harbledown

=Frances WILD; daughter of Sir John WILD

-John (†1625)

-Robert

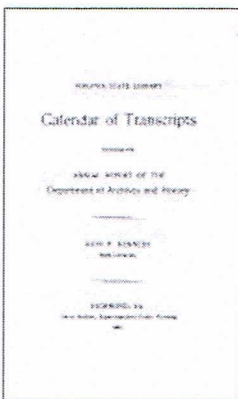

=Mrs. WOOD; widow

*of Knowlton (*1590; †1623) as Mary ASTON of Cranford*

Calendar of Transcripts: Including the Annual Report of the Department of Archives and History

By John Pendleton Kennedy, Edward Steptoe Evans, Virginia State Library Archives Division, Archives Division, Virginia State Library

Summary

By John Pendleton Kennedy, Edward Steptoe Evans, Virginia State Library Archives Division, Archives Division, Virginia State Library

Published 1905
Davis Bottom, superintendent public printing

658 pages

Original from the University of Michigan

Digitized 13 Nov 2006

Edward Steptoe Evans, acting chief of the Division of archives and history.

Buy this book

Abebooks.co.uk

Google Product S

Borrow this book

Find this book in

Other editions

Calendar of Transcripts: Including the Annual Report of the Department of Archives and History
by John Pendleton Kennedy, Edward Steptoe Evans, Virginia State Library Archives Division, Archives Division, Virginia State Library - 1905 - 658 pages
Edward Steptoe Evans, acting chief of the Division of archives and history.
No preview available

Ke

jen tra pa po rer lud vir
co
bla

The Virginia Magazine of History and Biography

By Virginia Historical Society

Summary

By Virginia Historical Society

Editors: 1893-98, P.A. Bruce
1928, W.G. Stanard.

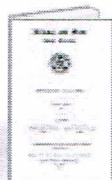

Contributor Philip Alexander Bruce, William Glover Stanard

Published 2000
Virginia Historical Society

Original from Stanford University

Digitized 31 Aug 2006

Related books

The William and Mary Quarterly

by Institute of Early American History and Culture (Williamsburg, Va.), College of William and Mary - 1964
Editors: 1892-1919, L. G. Tyler--1921-43, E. G. Swem with others.--1944-46 R. L. Morton and others.

Snippet view - About this book

A Blessed Company: parishes, parsons, and parishioners in Anglican Virginia, 1690-1776

by John Kendall Nelson - 2002 - 477 pages

In this book, John Nelson reconstructs everyday Anglican religious practice and experience in Virginia from the end of the seventeenth century to the start of the American...

Other editions

The Virginia Magazine
by Virginia Historical Society
Editors: 1893-98, P.A. Bruce
Snippet view - About this book

The Virginia Magazine
by Virginia Historical Society
Title from ProQuest on December 10, 2006
Snippet view - About this book

The Virginia Magazine
by Virginia Historical Society
Editors: 1893-98, P.A. Bruce
Snippet view - About this book

show more »

Search in this book

"john bargrave"

Search

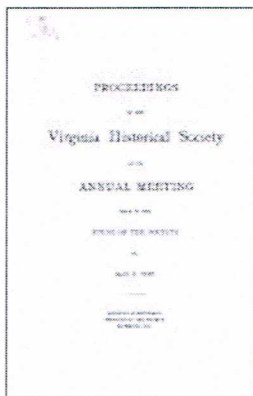

7 pages matching "john ba

The Virginia Magazine of History and Biography

By Virginia Historical Society

Summary

By Virginia Historical Society

Editors: 1893-98, P. A. Bruce
W. G. Stanard

Contributor Philip Alexander Bruce, William Glover Stanard

Published 1893
Virginia Historical Society

Original from Stanford University

Digitized 22 Feb 2006

Contents

Assembly of Virginia 1919 Tercentenary of caperton, lewter, marcuson	203
Byrd William First Letters of sayeth, shoare, epes	260
Notes and Queries skillen, handy, skillern	309
9 other sections not shown

Other editions

The Virginia Magazine of History and Biography
by Virginia Historical Society - 1961
Editors: 1893-98, P.A. Bruce; 1899-1928, W.G. Stanard.
Snippet view - About this book

The Virginia Magazine of History and Biography
by Virginia Historical Society - 1893
Title from ProQuest 5000 International journal list (viewed on December 10, 2002)
Snippet view - About this book

The Virginia Magazine of History and Biography
by Virginia Historical Society - 2000
Editors: 1893-98, P.A. Bruce; 1899-1928, W.G. Stanard.

Snippet view - About this book

show more »

Search in this book

1 page matching "john bargrave" in this book

Page 143

therunto required wherefor Court hath herunto condescended
(8) A paper published in this Magazine VII, 146, shows this to have been Capt. John Bargrave, of Patricksbourn, Kent. Robert Bargrave, of Bridge, Kent, had a number of children. One of the daughters Ingle or Angel, married Rev. John Boys, afterwards Dean of Carterbury. The

Where's the rest of this book?

Ke

au ne pre ex ish res

Pla

orth Pa
Ocea

50

1:

1:

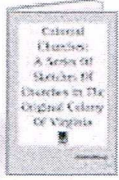

-

more

About Google Book Search - Book Search Blog - Information for Publishers - Provide Feedback - Google Home

©2007 Google

Limited preview -
Table of Contents -
About this book

Colonial Churches: A Series Of Sketches Of Churches In The Original Colony Of Virginia

by Anonymous - 2004 - 388
pages

With Pictures Of Each Church.
Each Sketch By An Especially Qualified Writer.

Limited preview - About this book

show more »

As soon as Martin obtain close business partnership wi in Kent, elder brother of Capt tin's daughter Dorcas. And t pany had gone to much expense in the face of much discouragem large enthusiasm for the enterp subscribers were frankly disillus

John Bargrave; and it is express purpose of carry dentally also to bring ove
for Martin's Brandon. Th

Key terms

jenings, virginia historical, caruthers, virginia gazette, calwell, colonial churches, miskell, virginia magazine, skyring, swift creek, henrico, captain martin, argall, benjamin harrison, nelms, lindsay opie, nova scotia, temperance flowerdew, patrick henry,
staunton spectator

Places mentioned in this book

📍 707 E. Franklin Street, Richmond, Virginia
- Page 77

📍 581 E. Street, Chula Vista, California -
Page 179

📍 20 Adams Place, Delmar, New York -

RESEARCHES AND DISCOVERIES IN KENT

THE BUILDER OF BIFRONS

In their interesting note on the excavations at the site of Bifrons in Patrixbourne, R. Cross and T. Allen say that the original house 'was erected either by Sir Robert Bargrave (d. 1600) or by his son, Sir John Bargrave' (Arch. Cant., cvii [1989], 328), but neither Robert nor John, nor any other member of the family, was ever knighted.

In his will Robert Bargrave describes himself as Robert Bargar, of Bridge, yeoman, but he was also a tanner there and was buried in the chancel of Bridge church on 4th January, 1600/01, as was his wife Jane, daughter of John Gilbert, of St. Peter's, Sandwich, late in 1603. He had directed in his will, which was dated in 1598, that he was to be buried with his father at Patrixbourne, but he apparently changed his mind. He was identified with Bridge, where he had his tanhouse, rather than with Patrixbourne, and of his eleven children all were baptized at Bridge, except the last three, who were baptized at Patrixbourne, beginning with his son, George, on 2nd April, 1586.

John, the eldest son of Robert, was certainly of Patrixbourne and, moreover, he did not inherit his father's tanhouse at Bridge, although his eldest son was baptized there in 1598. Of his seven remaining children, five were baptized at Patrixbourne, but Sarah, the fifth, was baptized at Tilmanstone, on 8th November, 1607, and John, the sixth, at Nonington, on 18th November, 1610, suggesting the family's absence from Patrixbourne during that time. Their father is reputed to have been the builder of Bifrons, and it would appear from these details that he was, and that the construction was carried out in the period 1607 to 1611. It was in September 1611, too, that John Bargrave, alias Bargar, of Patrixbourne, had a grant of arms from Camden, Garter.

The possibility that John's father, Robert, built Bifrons cannot as yet be ruled out, but is contrary to tradition and not really supported by the existing evidence. One interesting aspect of the matter is the sudden rise to riches of the Bargar, or Bargraves, of Bridge, because before John, certainly, and Robert, possibly, the family were of somewhat humdrum station in Willesborough. Wealth may have come through John's marriage to Jane, the daughter and co-heir of Giles Crouche, of London, about 1597.

them, for the Honour of the House, and Advancement of the Service, to make Choice of some fitter; whereof there are many.

Mr. Treasurer and Mr. Comptroller fetch and lead him to the Chair; where being set, he stood up, and told the House, that, sithence he found this done by God's Designment and Providence, his best Endeavours should not be wanting: Would carry an even Heart between Head and Body, and clean Hands, in Bills between Party and Party: Yet desireth Liberty, with their Favour, to appeal to his Majesty, to spare him, and to direct the Choice of a fitter.—That his Majesty hath appointed the House, upon Saturday, at Two of the Clock in the Afternoon, to present their Speaker to him.

Generally agreed to meet here, and to be ready at One; and so the House departed.

Sabbati, 21<sup>o</sup> Februarii, 21<sup>o</sup> Jacobi.

THE Speaker elect coming into the House presently after One of the Clock this Afternoon, and sitting in his Chair till about Three, at last a Messenger came down from the Upper House, declaring, his Majesty had sent for this House, to come up, and present their Speaker unto him.

Whereupon Mr. Speaker elect went up, accompanied with about 200 of the House.

The Speaker returning about an Hour after, with the Serjeant carrying the Mace before him; and being set in his Chair, and the House settled; according to the usual Custom, there was read,

L. 1<sup>a</sup>. An Act concerning Probate of Suggestions, in Cases of Prohibition.

This was a Bill, which had been read, committed, and ingrossed, the last Convention in Parliament.

Which Bill being read; without any Motion made, or other Thing done (as the usual Manner on that Day hath been) Mr. Speaker, and the House, arose and departed.

Lanae, 23<sup>o</sup> Februarii, 1623.

MR. Sneling delivereth in the Bill of the Sabaoth; which passed both Houses last Convention in Parliament, and hath eversithence 27<sup>o</sup> Eliz. passed this House.

L. 1<sup>a</sup>. An Act for punishment of divers Abuses on the Lord's Day, called Sunday.

Sir James Perrott:—A Jove principium.—That, as in the Two last Parliaments the Communion administered, so now; as a Sign of Unity in Mind and Religion, and of our Charity:—And a Thanksgiving, for our Meeting, and for the Prince his safe Return.—Allowed a good Motion.

The old Order, being read, was allowed; and the like to be now observed.

Sir Edw. Cecil:—Glad that we in this Course.—Moveth (as in the Low Countries used) a general Fast for this House.—This to be general through all the Kingdom, at a Day to be prefixed.—A Bidd-day called there.—Very bountiful to the Poor there.—This a Subsidy of Thanks to the King.—To petition his Majesty for his Consent to this.

Sir Wm. Strode:—To have this moved to the King by some honourable Person about the Chair.—Hopeth, now no Man of this . . . ill affected of Religion.—The Knights of the Shires to take Notice of all Persons returned, and to give Information of any returned, suspected in Religion; whereof knoweth none.

Sir Wm. Boulstrode propoundeth, for the Preacher, Dr. Bargrave Minister of St. Margaret's, the Place agreed upon.—The Time, Sunday next.

Sir Francis Barrington, Sir Edw. Gyles, Sir Wm. Boulstrode, Sir James Perrott, Sir Wm. Pitts, and the Clerk to take Care of those which receive the Communion.

Sir Geor. Moore:—A good Beginning a good Step the End. The best Beginning, to look to the End. Motions past tend all to the Glory to God. This in Fore-front of all Statute-books printed. The like Motion 27<sup>o</sup> Eliz. and an Order, for One of the Privy Council to move the Queen.—Else not fit; for this Motion be general, and not only for ourselves.

Mr. Speaker:—We Power over ourselves only. In general, over the Kingdom, not in our Power.

Sir Edw. Wardor, accordant.

Mr. Secretary, and Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer and Sir Edw. Cecil, to move the King forthwith in it

Sir Tho. Hobby,—for a View of all Bills passed, read to pass, and thought fit to pass.—No new Bill to read, till those twice read, and committed.

Mr. Pymme:—Private Bills, at fit Times, to be excepted L. 1<sup>a</sup>. Limitation of Actions, and for avoiding Suit in Law.

Sir Myles Fleetwood electeth for Launson.

Sir Nath. Rich, for Harwich.

Sir Cl. Cotterell electeth for Grantham.

Sir Ed. Conway moveth a new Writ may be sent a new Election for Rye.—Agreed.

A general Warrant to Mr. Speaker, to make Warrant for new Writs, in Cases of Death, or double Return.

Sir Henry Halcrofte electeth for Stockbridge.

Mr. Brooke electeth for Yorke.

Sir Geor. Goring electeth for Leceys.

Sir A. Ingram electeth for Yorke.

Sir Tho. Cheeke electeth as Knight for Essex.

Sir Jo. Strangways moveth an Election for Privileges.

Sir Jo. Strangways, Sir Edw. Coke, Sir Geor. Moo

Sir D. Digges, Sir Walter Earle, Sir Wm. Strode,

G. Gerrard, Sir Ro. Hatton, Sir Tho. Jermyn, Sir G

Palmes, **Christopher Nevyll*, Sir James Perrott, Sir G

Fane, Sir A. St. John, Mr. Recorder, Sir John Jephis

Mr. Solicitor, Sir Tho. Hatton, Mr. Drake, Sir H. Poi

Sir Ro. Phillipps, Sir Nath. Rich, Sir Geor. Goring,

P. Hayman, Mr. Pymme, Sir Jo. Savyle, Sir Tho. Chee

Sir Olyver Luke, Sir Tho. Trevor, Mr. Fanshawe, Sir W

Poley, Sir Wm. Fleetwood, Sir Francis Fane, Mr. Alfo

Sir Francis Barrington, Sir Geor. Manners, Mr. Gle

wyle, Sir Wm. Herbert, Mr. Drew Drury, Sir Fran

Barnam, Sir Tho. Aprice, Sir Nich. Tufton, Sir H. Sp

ler, Sir H. Fane, Sir Edw. Payton, Sir M. Fleetwood,

Rich. Yong, Sir Ro. Maunsell, Sir Ben. Rudyar, Sir T

Denton, Sir Roger North, Mr. Corington, Chancel

Duchy, Sir Charles Morison, Mr. Pethersten, Sir Ed

Cecil, Mr. Moore, Sir H. Wallopp, Mr. Brooke.

Mr. Mallory, and Sir Tho. Hobby:—To have all, th will come, to have Voice.

Mr. Speaker putteth them in mind of the Orders the House, which never so in this.

Sir Francis Seymour:—To have the Question, wheth

every Man shall have Voice.

Mr. Alford, contra:—Because against all Precedent

Question, Whether all that will come, to have Voi at this Committee:—Resolved, No.

Question, Whether the Persons nominated only be:—Resolved, Yea.

Mr. Pymme:—Counsel to be admitted at the Com mittee.—Agreed.

To begin on Thursday in the Afternoon, at Two of t

King appointed to be attended.

House attends the King.

Prohibitions.

Adjournment.

Sunday.

Members to receive the Communion.

General Fast.

Preacher appointed.

House.—Friday next to be the first Day, at Two of the Clock; and so every Friday and Monday, during this Session.

Sir Wm. Bolstrode,—for a Sub-committee for Grievances.

Sir Ro. Phillippes:—No such Committee last Convention; but Petitions presented to him, that had the Chair for Grievances.

Courts of Justice.

Sir Ro. Phillippes moveth, a Committee of the whole House for Courts of Justice, in the House, upon Wednesday next; and, after, every Wednesday, during this Session.—Resolved.

Swearing.

L. 1<sup>a</sup>. Act against profane Swearing and Cursing.

Concealments.

L. 1<sup>a</sup>. An Act for the general Quiet of the Subjects against all Pretences of Concealments whatsoever.

House to sit.

Notice, of a Message from the Lords, that shall be presently sent; and therefore desire we will sit till it come; which is intended not to be long.

Answer sent by the Serjeant to the Messenger without, that brought it, that the House will sit.

Prohibitions.

L. 2<sup>a</sup>. An Act concerning Probate of Suggestions of Cases of Prohibition.—

Mr. Glanville:—To have this Bill committed:—For safest for the Passage of the Bill.—But presently to do it, and bring it back again.

Sir Geor. Moore:—No committing, without some Exception taken against it.

Mr. Banks:—In the Four Counties of Northumberland, Westmorland, Cumberland, and Bishoprick of Durham, have Assizes but once a Year.—To have Provision here for them.

Dr. Gooch:—Prohibitions oft mischievous, Suits thrice affirmed; in Country, Arches, Delegates.—To have Prohibitions restrained to some Time.—Costs to be taxed.—

Committed to Sir Edw. Coke, Mr. Glanville, Mr. Solicitor, Sir Ro. Hitcham, Mr. Recorder, Mr. Brooke, Mr. Banks, Dr. Gooch:—Presently, in the Committee Chamber.

Conference.

A Message from the Lords by the Two Chief Justices, Serjeant Davys, Serjeant Crew.—

Lord Chief Justice:—The Lords have sent us with this Message to this honourable House: That, whereas the King's Majesty in his Speech declared, he would give Direction to his Admiral, and Two Secretaries, to deliver certain Particulars, of great Consequence, the principal Cause of calling this Parliament; the Lords, for the better Correspondence of both Houses, which they earnestly desire, desire a Conference between both Houses, Tomorrow, in the Painted Chamber, if this House think fit: The Reason, because the Secretaries being to attend, and make Relation, with their Papers, any may ask any Question; wherein the Admiral will give Satisfaction.

Mr. Speaker relateth the Message to the House.

Mr. Alford:—No man here, as he supposeth, prepared to make Demands, but to hear them; and then lawful for any Member of it to ask any Question, to receive Satisfaction; but no further.

Sir Geor. Moore:—When a Conference about Supply to the King, we refused to confer, otherwise than to hear, upon generals, without making any particular Answer.

Mr. Treasurer:—The Intent of this Conference, to inform us of the Particulars of the Heads delivered by the King; and then, if any doubtful, to propound, and require Satisfaction.

Sir Edw. Coke:—No Man to speak there, without Warrant from the House.—Now only to hear, and to speak nothing.

Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Sir Francis ton, to be added to them; and they Four to in Report back to this House.

The Committee brought back the Bill for Sug in Prohibitions; with Omnia bene.—Upon G. Ingrassetur.

Sir H. Fane electeth to serve for Carlisle.

Martis, 24° Februarii, 1623.

L. 1<sup>a</sup>. AN Act for the Naturalizing of Phillimachi.

L. 1<sup>a</sup>. An Act for the Naturalizing of Gyles Vt

Sir Edw. Howard electeth to serve for Cavene shyre, and relinquisheth Wallingford in Berkeshyre.

Sir Edw. Coke moves to husband Time.—Want, in the Realm, of that, which is the Lil Kingdom; Trade, and . . . —The Want of Votive Commodities, which brings a great Want of and that begetteth a Disvaluation of all our natimodities.—As in the natural Body, so in the pWhen that inclines to a Consumption, Two M adjuvans, and removens.—An excellent Parliamnow, to remove Impediments. The Exports Ed. III. thrice as much as the Importation: Importation far exceeds the Exportation.—To select Committee for this Business.

Mr. Neale:—At our last Meeting here, this for Trade much debated. The Patents of Monof Trade the principal Means of Decay of Trad

The Low Countries a good Precedent; who a Trade and Shipping.—The Merchant Adventur and the East-land Company of London.—The Wt ty Men abounding in Shipping, yet have Mu &c. but from London.—To have these Patents in to the Committee, to be appointed for Trade.

Sir Wm. Cope:—That this Committee may t consideration of the Necessities of poor Tradesm cially belonging to Clothing.

Mr. Sherwill:—That the Trade overcharged t burthened with some Things prohibited.

A Committee of the whole House, Thursd Afternoon; and so every Thursday, in the Hous

Mr. Wyld moveth, a Select Committee for th in the Exchequer.

L. 1<sup>a</sup>. An Act concerning Monopolies, and D tion with penal Laws, and the Forfeitures there

Sir Wm. Fleetwood moveth, the Bills, again: sonment, contrary to Magna Charta, and again: of Carriages, may be provided, and read To-mo

L. 1<sup>a</sup>. An Act for the Ease of the Subject, co Informations upon penal Laws.

L. 1<sup>a</sup>. An Act to prevent and punish . . . in p Process, and Supersedeas, for the Peace and go: viour, out of his Majesty's Courts at Westmins to prevent the Abuses in procuring Writs of C out of the same Courts, for the Removing of Ind before Justices of the Peace, in their general Se the Peace.

Mr. Attorney-general and Mr. Serjeant Fin from the Lords a Message; That their Lordshij ing the Painted Chamber too strait, have, in re the Weight and Importance of the Business, the

Centre for Kentish Studies: Kent Quarter Sessions [QM/SRc/1606 - QM/SRc/1618]

The contents of this catalogue are the copyright of Centre for Kentish Studies. Rights in the Access to Archives database are the property of the Crown, © 2001-2004.

To find out more about the archives described below, contact Centre for Kentish Studies

Kent Quarter Sessions

Catalogue Ref. Q

Creator(s):

Canterbury Quarter Sessional Division, c 1350-1797

Maidstone Quarter Sessional Division, c 1350-1797

Kent Court of Quarter Sessions, 1797-1814

Kent Court of Annual General Session, 1814-1971

West Kent Quarter Sessions Records

RECOGNIZANCES - ref. QM/SRc

FILE - Edward Wilsford of Tilmanstone, yeoman, in £10, to cease victualling "unless he shall hereafter procure lycence from the Bench for that purpose"; sureties, John Bargrave of the same, esquire, William Gibbens of Betshanger, yeoman, Thomas Wilsford of Sandwich, surgeon and Vincent Wilsford of Tilmanstone, yeoman. - ref. QM/SRc/1607/35 - date: 25 April 1607

Search Results

help

You ran a basic search on "bargrave".

There were 7 hits within catalogue entry details. Hits 1 to 7 are shown below sorted by covering dates.

PRO Reference	Title/Scope and Content	Covering Dates
E 328/156/ii	Commission to R(ober) t, Archbishop of York, William Babthorpe kt., Robert Chalenor esq., and Thomas Bargrave esq., to take the above acknowledgment. Endorsement that ececution appears on indenture annexed.	26 March 1548.
C 3/22/30	Boys v. Bargrave: Kent.	A.D. 1558-1579
STAC 5/B60/37	Bargrave v. Dickenson &amp; Alger	33 Eliz.
STAC 5/B69/28	Bargrave v. Algar and others	36 Eliz
STAC 8/235/19	Payton v. Boys, Pownall, Austen and Bargrave (Bargar): Kent.	04/03/1603-27/03/1625
STAC 8/235/18	Payton v. Boys, Hamond, Bargrave (Burgrave), Pownall, Austen, Dison, Oldfielde (Ovill) and others: Kent	04/03/1603-27/03/1625
E 134/1Jas1/Mich11	Christopher Phillips v. Edwd. Payne, John Fletcher.: Land in the manor of St. Neots, called "Balyes Hedge" otherwise "Colfields, in Bargrave"; whether formerly held by John Phillips (grandfather to plaintiff) as of the manor of St. Neots, and how; and whether plaintiff is right heir thereto? whether the lands were granted to Robert Payne (father to defendant) by the late Queen Elizabeth, by lease under Great Seal, in consideration of a yearly pension of 8l.	1 Jas 1 1603

refine

Sort results by former reference.

Sort results by catalogue reference.

Sort results using relevance ranking.

MSS Home : MSS Index : MSS Descriptions

Manuscripts: Index Entries

Search for: Bargrave

---

- 1. Bargrave . Family of. Pedigree 19th cent. Add. 33919 f. 294
- 2. Bargrave (-) Capt.. His project touching Virginia 1623. Add. 12496
3. Bargrave (Isaac) . Letter to J. Evelyn 1775. Add. 38480 f. 344
4. Bargrave (Robert) . Letter to W. Longueville 1680. Add. 29557 f. 441
5. Bargrave (Robert) . Letters to R. Oxenden and others 1637-1648. Add. 27999 ff. 265, 266, 290 Add. 28002 ff. 87, 89
- 6. Bargrave (Robert) . of Canterbury Biographical notes on him and his wife 1628-1661. Sloane. 1708 f. 107
7. Deane (Henry Bargrave) Sir. judge Letter to Lady Gilbert 1911 Add. 49341 f. 166

Number of hits: 7.

---

MSS Home : MSS Index : MSS Descriptions

The contents of this catalogue are the copyright of Centre for Kentish Studies.
Rights in the Access to Archives database are the property of the Crown, © 2001-2003.

To find out more about the archives described below, contact Centre for Kentish Studies

Dering Manuscripts Part 2

Catalogue Ref. U1107

CORRESPONDENCE

FILE - Robert Bargrave - ref. U1107/C29 - date: [1660]

FILE - Robert Bargrave - ref. U1107/C31 - date: 1660

FILE - Joseph Roberts - ref. U1107/C33 - date: 1661

↳ [from Scope and Content] to Sir Edward Dering seeking a settlement of the estate of Robert Bargrave deed, for which Dering acts

ESTATE PAPERS

Testamentary matters

FILE - Draft of letter from Sir Edward Dering - ref. U1107/E6 - date: 1661

↳ [from Scope and Content] Relating to the estate of his 'cousin' Bargrave

FamilySearch® International Genealogical Index™ v4.01

British Isles

IGI Record

Select record to download - (50 maximum)

 Isaac BARGRAUE*Sex: MEvent(s):*Christening: 14 Aug 1660

Cathedral, Canterbury, Kent, England

Parents:*Father: Robert BARGRAUEMother:*Source Information:

Batch number:	Dates	Source Call No.	Type	Printout Call No.	T
P020651	1564- 1861	942 B4HA V.2	Book	6906421	F

Sheet:Prepare selected records for download

Gender: M Christening: 14 Aug 1660 Cathedral, Canterbury, Kent, England

© 1999 by Intellectual Reserve, Inc. All rights reserved. English approval: 3/1999

Use of this site constitutes your acceptance of these Conditions of Use. Last updated: 3/22/1999Privacy Policy. Last updated: 3/22/1999

Family:

Marriage: ,,USA
Spouse:

Witten, Sarah Jane
Birth : 12 JUL 1838 ,Tazewell Co.,Virginia,USA

*Bargrave collection of artefact ~ 1660
in Cant. Cath. Leds*

Back to Main Page

1629 Dean Bargrave organ - Cant. Cath.

Bargrave, Anne

Parents:

Father: Bargrave, Isaac Dean-Canterbury

*d. 1643 Canon of 5th prob, Canterbury 1662-1680
Dean, Canterbury III, iii, 24
1625-1643, III, iii, 12*

Family:

Spouse:

Coppin, Thomas Reverend

Parents:

Father: Coppin, John Esq.
Mother: Susan

*John Bargrave d. 1630
Canon of 5th prob Canterbury 1662-1680
III, iii, 25*

Family:

Marriage: ,,Kent,England
Spouse:

Palmer, Henry Sir
Birth : Of Howlets,,Kent,England
Death : 1659 ,,Kent,England

Children:

Palmer, Isaac
Palmer, Robert
Palmer, John

Main ScreenNew LettercodeNew ClassNew PieceSearchHelp

Document Details for STAC 8/235/18

Lettercode Title Records of the Court of Star Chamber and of other courts
Class Title Court of Star Chamber: Proceedings, James I
Piece Title Payton v. Boys, Hamond, Bargrave (Burgrave), Pownall, Austen, Dison, Oldfielde (O others: Kent
Text Date 04/03/1603-27/03/1625
Closure Status Open
Place of Deposit Public Record Office, Kew

Goto Document Details for STAC 8/235/18 to store a favorite/bookmark to these details

First DocumentPrevious DocumentNext DocumentFinal Document

Catalogue Release 1.4

Catalogue

- Main Screen
- New Lettercode
- New Class
- New Piece
- Search
- Help

Document Details for STAC 8/235/19

Lettercode Title      Records of the Court of Star Chamber and of other courts
Class Title            Court of Star Chamber: Proceedings, James I
Piece Title            Payton v. Boys, Pownall, Austen and Bargrave (Bargar): Kent.
Text Date             04/03/1603-27/03/1625
Closure Status        Open
Place of Deposit      Public Record Office, Kew

Goto Document Details for STAC 8/235/19 to store a favorite/bookmark to these details

- First Document
- Previous Document
- Next Document
- Final Document

Bargrave, John (bap. 1610, d. 1680), Church of England clergyman and collector of curiosities, was baptized at Nonington, Kent, on 18 November 1610. His father, also named John, was the elder brother of Isaac Bargrave and had increased the family fortune derived from tanneries in east Kent by his marriage to Jane Crouch, the daughter of a prosperous London haberdasher. A year after the birth of John, his second son, he received a grant of arms and soon afterwards retired from his profession as a mercenary soldier to build the country house of Bifrons, at Patricbourne, near Canterbury. As a younger son, Bargrave was destined to follow his uncle into the church. He attended the King's School, Canterbury, between 1623 and 1626, and proceeded in 1629 to Peterhouse at Cambridge where Isaac's close friend Matthew Wren was master. He served as college librarian between 1634 and 1636 and was admitted as a fellow in 1637. By this stage Wren had been succeeded by John Cosin, at Archbishop Laud's special behest. In the polarization of political and religious views that preceded the outbreak of the civil war, Bargrave held to the churchmanship and royalist loyalties of his Kentish connections. His uncle, as dean of Canterbury, took a lead in defending universities and cathedral chapters against the Long Parliament in 1641, and helped to rally the Kentish gentry to the king's support in 1642. Bargrave himself was caught up in the reprisals, being ejected from his fellowship in 1644.

From 1645 until the Restoration, Bargrave chose to spend most of his time travelling on the continent. From time to time he had charge of young fellow travellers from among his Kentish and Cambridge connections. The first of these journeys, which took place in 1646–7, resulted in the first Italian guidebook published in the English language; it appeared under the name of his nephew John Raymond. The likelihood that Bargrave had a major part in this work is strengthened by the recent discovery of a manuscript journal of Bargrave's earlier French tour of 1645. Bargrave's periods of foreign residence, and particularly the four journeys to Rome that he undertook in 1647, 1650, 1655, and 1660, enabled him to collect numerous coins, curiosities, and small-scale antiquities. His subsequent comments in cataloguing them, together with his acute observations penned in the margins of a set of mounted prints of the College of Cardinals, provide innumerable piquant details about his life as a royalist exile.

With the Restoration Bargrave resumed his ecclesiastical career, though his longest foreign journey was still to come. In September 1662, simultaneously with his appointment as a canon of Canterbury, he took charge of a royal mission to ransom Christian slaves from the dey of Algiers; the mission, successfully concluded, allowed him to add a portrait of the dey and a mummified chameleon to his collection.

Bargrave's marriage in 1665 to Frances Osborne, née Wilde, a well-connected Kentish widow, was childless. Up to his death in Canterbury on 11 May 1680 he remained an active member of the cathedral chapter, compiling a survey of its revenues as receiver-general in 1675, and later serving as vice-dean. He was survived by his wife. Buried in Canterbury Cathedral, he had requested that the chains of one of the slaves whom he had redeemed be hung over his grave. His meticulously documented collection, housed originally in two cabinets and left to the dean and chapter in his will, has achieved a widespread reputation as the best preserved example of its kind in Britain.

---

Sources Pope Alexander the Seventh and the College of Cardinals, by John Bargrave ...; with a catalogue of Dr Bargrave's Museum, ed. J. C. Robertson, CS, 92 (1867) · S. Bann, Under the sign: John Bargrave as collector, traveler and witness (1994) · D. Sturdy and M. Henig, The gentle traveller: John Bargrave, canon of Canterbury and his collection (1985) · J. Raymond, An itinerary contayning a voyage made through Italy in the yeare 1646, and 1647 (1648) · J.

Bargrave, 'A part of my journal of France 1645', Canterbury Cathedral Library, IRBY deposit, U11/8 · J. Harris, 'To oblivion and back: Dr Bargrave's Museum of Rarities', Country Life, 179 (1986), 278–80 · C. E. Woodruff, 'A seventeenth-century survey of the estates of the dean and chapter of Canterbury in east Kent', Archaeologia Cantiana, 38 (1926), 29–44 · Venn, Alum. Cant., 1/1.84 · J. Philipott, 'The visitation of the county of Kent taken in the year 1619 [pt 1]', Archaeologia Cantiana, 4 (1861), 241–72, esp. 252 · A. Bernau, Sixteenth-century marriages, 1538–1600 (1911) · P. H. Blake, 'The builder of Bifrons', Archaeologia Cantiana, 108 (1990), 270

Archives Canterbury Cathedral, IRBY deposit, U11/8 · Canterbury Cathedral, literary MSS, E 39

Likenesses M. Bolognini, oils, 1647, Canterbury Cathedral Library · assistant of G. B. Canini, oils, 1650, Canterbury Cathedral Library

iconography. Protestants, especially Puritans, were naturally less attached to the Gothic in religious architecture; and Protestant fears of paganism and idolatry restricted use of mythological and overly self-aggrandizing references in portraits, except in court circles.

Variety of response matched richness of source material in the British Renaissance; and the authors of Albion's Classicism have performed an important service in rescuing the complexity of that period and that place.

JUDITH M. AKEHURST

Minneapolis, Minnesota

Stephen Bann. Under the Sign: John Bargrave as Collector, Traveler, and Witness. (The Body, In Theory: Histories of Cultural Materialism.) Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press, 1994. 30 pls. + x + 152 pp. $34.50. ISBN: n.a.

Although John Bargrave's name may not be recognized by most readers, this somewhat obscure mid-seventeenth-century Kentish gentleman, traveler, and vice-Dean of Canterbury Cathedral has warranted a book-length study of his life almost by historical accident: Bargrave's Cabinet of Curiosities, assembled during his Cromwellian-era travels on the continent, remains one of the few such collections to have survived largely intact. Yet despite its unique status, still preserved and catalogued in Canterbury Cathedral, Bargrave's holdings have earned little critical notice. As Bann points out, Bargrave's life and works are significant because they traverse both the history of collecting, with its link to the origins of Western European museums, and the practice of early modern travel, particularly the relation of travel to exile during the Civil War period.

Heavily influenced by the theoretical work of Krzysztof Pomian and Stephen Greenblatt, Bann's study examines the ways that Bargrave offers an example of "the special phenomenon of 'living symbolically'" (viii). The consummate "semiophore-man," in Pomian's terms, Bargrave uses travel and collecting as often-compensatory strategies of self-representation. Bann's first chapter, "Rise and Fall of the House of Bargrave," examines Bargrave's family background and early life. The most historically-oriented section of Bann's argument, this chapter contains some of the most interesting details of the book; ironically, Bann's discussion is at its liveliest when directed at figures other than Bargrave himself, like Bargrave's father John, who campaigned for a "patriarchal" management of the Virginia Colony, or his uncle Isaac, Dean of Canterbury Cathedral during the Laudian era. Also, Bann's heavily-theoretical attention to minutiae often detracts from these intriguing details, as when he discusses the ideological import of orthographical changes to the Bargrave name, and the etymology of the family's country home ("Bifrons"), or his labored reading of the inscription on a family monument that the younger Bargrave placed in the parish church of Patrixbourne. This section is more successful when it examines the significance of family links to key sites of power and patronage, like university, church, and local politics — a fascinating look at the background of two generations of an extended Kentish Royalist family on the eve of the Civil War.

Bann's argument gains strength in its final two chapters, particularly in its association of Bargrave's practice of collecting to relevant theoretical models, like Foucault's concept of the "author-function," Freud's theory of mourning, or Adorno's comments on Benjamin's own similar "lack of system." Bann is less successful in providing evidence for the symbolic import of Bargrave's collection as a whole; the fact that Bargrave received many of these items as gifts, and that his efforts at collecting were hampered by his inability to afford or transport many desired objects, does little to support Bann's contention that Bargrave's collection represents a concerted effort and coherent pattern of self-representation. Bann's final chapter, "The Witness of History," provides a fascinating examination of Bargrave's College of Cardinals, an annotated manuscript collection of portraits of Catholic leaders. One wishes that Bann had further explored these issues of religious politics and controversy. Although Bann's book often frustrates its reader with its concern for minutiae over comprehensiveness, this study will serve a valuable purpose if it directs further critical attention to the early modern cultural practices of travel and collecting.

MARK NETZLOFF

University of Delaware

Graham Parry. The Trophies of Time: English Antiquarians of the Seventeenth Century. Oxford and New York: Oxford University Press, 1995. 16 b/w illus. + xi + 382 pp. $85. ISBN: 0-19-812962-9.

The seventeenth century witnessed growing interest in Britain's antiquity. While this interest was often motivated by intellectual curiosity, scholars also looked to the records and remains of early Britain to champion legal, political, and religious causes. The Renaissance appreciation of the classical world fostered examination of Britain's Roman history, ruins, and artifacts. This interest in the Roman occupation was balanced by a strong sense of national destiny that encouraged investigation of the Saxon and prehistoric roots of British civilization. Antiquaries examined Stonehenge, monastic ruins, Roman coins, funerary urns, early texts, and other remnants of the past. Antiquarian discoveries shaped nearly every facet of seventeenth-century British culture. Church historians aimed to chronicle the arrival and spread of Christianity in Britain, while linguists recognized the Anglo-Saxon roots of English and realized that knowledge of the Anglo-Saxon language was fundamental to a proper understanding of

 Habits of Reading

 Folger Library

 Home

Raymond, John. An Itinerary Contayning a Voyage.

London: Printed for Humphrey Moseley, 1648.

John Raymond undertook what has become known as the Grand Tour in the company of his uncle, John Bargrave, and another young man. There is some dispute about the authorship of the resulting book. But according to Edward Chaney, Raymond's Itinerary is "what we must now recognize as the first comprehensive English guidebook to Italy" (49).

It is also important for its Royalist prefatory epistle from Sir John Berkenhead, which links the origins of the formal Grand Tour with the events of the mid-seventeenth century. By presenting Rome as the ultimate destination for the young traveler (indicated by the phrase ne plus ultra, the "highest attainable point," or more ominously, "go no further"), the engraving signals the politics of the book to follow, a gesture particularly crucial in the year of Charles I's capture and execution. The bookseller, Humphrey Moseley, was the most important source for "high-end" Royalist books during the period. Moreover, the book's running title, Il Mercurio Italico, demonstrates its role in the "pamphlet wars" of the period, "Mercury" being the common name for newsbooks on both sides of the civil wars.

For further information, see Edward Chaney, The Grand Tour and the Great Rebellion: Richard Lassels and "The Voyage to Italy" in the Seventeenth Century (Genève: Slatkine, 1985) and Stephen Bann, Under the Sign: John Bargrave as Collector, Traveler, and Witness (Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press, 1994).

The image shows two pages from an engraved book. The left page is an engraved title page featuring two figures in classical attire standing on pedestals. The central text reads: "II MERCURIO ITALICO Communicating A Voyage Made through Italy in the yeares 1646 & 1647 by I. R. Gent." Above the figures are the names "Roma" and "Venetia". Below the pedestals are the words "Ne Plus", "Mome", and "Vltra". At the bottom, it says "London Printed for Hum: Moseley, & are to be sold at his Shop at Princes Armes in St. Pauls Church-yard. 1648." The right page is a typographical title page with the text: "AN 16517 ITINERARY Contayning A VOYAGE, Made through ITALY, In the yeare 1646, and 1647. Illustrated with divers figures of Antiquities. Never before Published. By JO: RAYMOND, Gent. LONDON, Printed for Humphrey Moseley, and are to be sold at his Shop at the Princes Armes in St. Pauls Church-yard. 1648. E.S." There is a handwritten note at the top left of the right page: "1648 by AN 16517".

Folger Call No. R415. Engraved title page and facing typographical title page.

Search Results

New Search Back

The Travel Diary of Robert Bargrave, (1647–1656), Levant Merchant

Michael Brennan

Series: Hakluyt Society, Third Series

$89.95/£45.00

Add to Basket

This is the first fully annotated old-spelling edition of the entire text of the autograph English journal of Robert Bargrave (1628–61), recording his extensive travels as a merchant. This manuscript (now Bodleian Library MS Rawlinson C 799), describes four separate journeys made by Bargrave: his sea voyage from England to Constantinople; an arduous return journey overland from Constantinople to England, via Bulgaria, Romania, Poland, Germany, and the Low Countries; extensive travels, for both commercial and cultural purposes, in Spain, Sicily, Italy and the Morea; and a return journey from Venice to Margate, via Trento, Innsbruck, and Augsburg, including his visit to Heidelberg where he met the exiled English royalist community at the court of Elizabeth, Queen of Bohemia.

The introduction to the edition gives detailed consideration to the political, religious, and personal affiliations of the Bargraves, a prominent Kentish family, with special reference to their experiences of overseas travel. While abroad, Robert also twice met up with his cousin, John Bargrave (c. 1610–80), the noted traveller and antiquarian. The introduction also provides an assessment of the historical, literary, and geographical importance of Robert Bargrave's journey; a survey of his extensive musical and dramatic interests; and the first detailed account of the provenances of both MS Rawlinson C 799 and now a lost earlier draft of this journal, identified here as the Eastry Court Manuscript. The edition includes seventeen illustrations, Bargrave family trees, and a selective bibliography of primary and secondary sources consulted.

Contents

Introduction; The Bargrave family: the life of Robert Bargrave; Isaac Bargrave and Sir Henry Wotton; The Bargraves and the Civil War; Robert Bargrave's travels: The first journey: April 1647–September 1652; The second journey: September 1652–March 1653; The third journey: November 1654–February 1656; The fourth journey: February 1654–March 1656; Robert Bargrave's dramatic and musical interests; Robert Bargrave's diary: Bodleian Library Oxford, MS Rawlinson C 799: Composition; Posthumous provenance of MS Rawlinson C 799; The Eastry Court manuscript of Robert Bargrave's travels; The travel diaries of Robert Bargrave; Robert Bargrave's sea voyage from England to Constantinople and his residence there (1647–52); Robert Bargrave's overland journey from Constantinople to England (1652–3); Robert Bargrave's travels in Spain and Italy (1654–6); Robert Bargrave's journey from Venice to Margate (1656); Bibliography; Index.

Further Information

Affiliation: Michael Brennan

Illustrations: Includes 17 b&w illustrations

ISBN: 0 904180 63 8

Publication Date: 09/1999

Number of Pages: 308 pages

Binding: Hardback

Binding Options: Available in Hardback only

Book Size: 247 x 174 mm

ASHGATE

Quick Search

View Shopping Bas

Retrieve Saved Bas

Go to Checkout

New Search

Series Search

Journals

About Ashgate

Join Our Mailing Lis

Ashgate Contacts

ASHGATE

THE EXILE OF TWO KENTISH ROYALISTS DURING THE ENGLISH CIVIL WAR

MICHAEL G. BRENNAN

In the early-summer of 1647 two members of the Bargrave family of Kent broke off their separate travels abroad to enjoy a two-week rendezvous at Siena, a city then especially favoured by English visitors for its architecture, wines, and horseriding, as well as for the clarity of its spoken Italian. John Bargrave (c. 1610-80), having been ejected in 1643 from his fellowship at Peterhouse, Cambridge, had been travelling through France and Italy since May 1645.<sup>1</sup> The younger man, Robert Bargrave (1628-61), was just beginning an adventurous life of international commerce and travel. The two men were first cousins and already knew each other well. Robert was the son of Dean Isaac Bargrave (1586-1643) of Eastry Court and Canterbury Cathedral while John was the son of Isaac's elder brother, John Bargrave of Bifrons and Patricxbourne (d. c. 1625).<sup>2</sup> In April 1647 Robert had left England on board the merchant ship London with his employer, James Modyford, an experienced Levant trader, and was bound for Turkey with the party of Sir Thomas Bendish, the new ambassador to Constantinople (Istanbul). After sailing from the Downs, the London arrived at Leghorn (Livorno). The young Robert was determined to cross from there to Siena in order to meet up with his cousin John. They were able to spend some two weeks exploring Siena before moving on to Florence where John devoted five days to guiding his cousin around the major tourist landmarks. Robert then travelled on alone for a further three weeks, rapidly acquiring a basic proficiency in the Italian language, before meeting up again with his party at Leghorn, from where they sailed on to Smyrna (Izmir) in Turkey.<sup>3</sup>

The travels abroad of John and Robert Bargrave are of interest to historians of the Civil War in Kent for several reasons. Firstly, unlike most other members of the Kentish gentry who withdrew - either discreetly or in more perilous flight - from England to the Continent during the 1640s and 1650s, these two have left unusually extensive written records of both their experiences abroad and their condemnatory views of the political developments in their home county. In addition to his travels in France (and later in the Low Countries, Poland, and Germany), John Bargrave also made at least four separate perambulations through Italy: in 1646-47 as tutor to two young Kentish men, Alexander Chapman and John Richards (or Rycaut),<sup>4</sup> who were also accompanied by Bargrave's nephew, John Raymond; in 1650 as tutor to Philip Stanhope (later second Earl of Chesterfield)<sup>5</sup> and William Swan;<sup>6</sup> in 1655 with William Juxon, the nephew of William Juxon, then Bishop of London and (from 1660) Archbishop of Canterbury; and again in 1659-1660 with unknown companions for a final visit to Rome.<sup>7</sup>

During this entire period, John Bargrave was an avid collector of small antiquities and other travel mementoes, which still fortunately survive along with his manuscripts as an integral collection at Canterbury Cathedral Archives.<sup>8</sup> He compiled an extensive catalogue of this cabinet of curiosities (Lit MS E 16), laced through with various anecdotes of his travels both in Italy and in other locations such as Leyden, Utrecht, Paris, Nuremberg, Augsburg, Vienna, Prague, and Innsbruck. On his last visit to Italy, John also purchased at Rome 'The Pope, and Colledge, or Conclave of Cardinalls' (Lit MS E 39a-c), an extensive set of prints of Pope Alexander VII and his cardinals (edited by James Craigie Robertson as The College of Cardinals in 1867, see note 5). He then heavily annotated these portraits with his own comments on both the individuals represented and papal history, as well as numerous incidental and fragmentary memoirs of his own travels abroad - thus rendering them, in this respect, as another kind of sporadic and disordered travel diary. In addition to these surviving manuscript collections, Anthony à Wood first suggested (and recent scholarship has tended to agree) that John Bargrave also played a major (and perhaps predominant) role in the compilation of the most famous English guidebook to Italy of the Civil War period, An Itinerary Contayning a Voyage Made Through Italy, in the Yeare 1646, and 1647 (1648).<sup>9</sup> Although this slim volume bore on its title-page the initials of John Raymond (who was, as already noted, Bargrave's nephew and one of his young charges during his 1646-47 residence in Italy), it seems likely that Raymond's manuscript was compiled with full access to John Bargrave's own notes.<sup>10</sup> Furthermore, John Bargrave's own manuscript diary of his travels through France from May 1645 until February 1646 with John Raymond and Alexander Chapman, crammed with his incidental observations, jottings, sketches, and reminiscences, has also recently surfaced in Canterbury Cathedral Archives (U11/8).

Robert Bargrave's travels abroad between April 1647 and March 1656 are no less well documented since he compiled a lengthy autograph diary (now in the Bodleian Library, Oxford) of four separate voyages undertaken at this period as a merchant trading in the Levant and other Mediterranean countries. The first account (April 1647-September 1652) describes his journey by sea from England to Constantinople and his often perilous experiences as a merchant in Turkey. The second account (September 1652-March 1653) records his arduous travels home overland from Turkey to England. Robert's third voyage (November 1654-February 1656) took him to Spain and then on to Venice; and his rapid progress home overland from Venice to England (February-March 1656) is described in the fourth account. Interspersed with Robert's accounts of various commercial and diplomatic incidents, are also examples of his own poetry, including a masque with musical settings, and his general observations as a tourist and exile from his own country.<sup>11</sup>

When drawn together, the various manuscript remains of John and Robert Bargrave offer an informative insight into the personal circumstances and political views of two Kentish men, who, like many others of their generation, were displaced abroad in the mid-1640s by the developing civil dissent in their home county. Although neither John or Robert Bargrave was an especially remarkable man in any way, each was clearly preoccupied with analysing and recording for posterity the significance of their own experiences as travellers; as well as asserting - for whatever readership was ultimately envisaged for their manuscripts - their own unwavering position in the ongoing struggle between Parliament and the English monarchy. As will be outlined below, the Bargraves could claim various personal royal connections, most notably through Robert's father, Dean Isaac Bargrave, who had served at Westminster from 1622 until 1625 as a personal chaplain to Prince Charles.<sup>12</sup> Isaac Bargrave was also on intimate terms with the prince's elder sister, Queen Elizabeth of Bohemia, whom he had visited at Heidelberg in 1616.<sup>13</sup> Hence, as travellers abroad on the same continent as the temporarily (at least to their eyes) displaced royal family and their various entourages, John and Robert Bargrave found in the concept of the exiled royalist Englishman a powerful and poignant expression of their nation's constitutional dilemma during the 1640s and 1650s.

John and Robert Bargrave as Royalist Emigrés

The way in which both John and Robert Bargrave sought to utilize the various written memorials of their travels between 1645 and 1660 as implicit statements of their personal loyalty to the English monarchy is well illustrated by an example from John Bargrave's scholarly annotations in his College of Cardinals to the portrait of Cardinal John Charles de' Medici, whom, by his own account he had often seen in the flesh at Rome and Florence. In a note jotted down in 1679 onto the portrait, John recalled:

I remember that one of the times that I was at Florence, in the Great Duke's most famous gallery, I found Cromwell's picture hanged up amongst the heroes (which vexed me); and I, after a day or two, having audience of the Great Duke (father to the present), he asked me how long it was since I was there last. I told him about 5 years. 'Then,' said he, 'I have added much to my gallery since you saw it last.' To which I answered, that there was one picture added, which was Cromwell's, that spoiled all the rest. At which he stopped, and did not know well how to take it; but, at length, said he, 'On occasion it is as easily taken down as it was hanged up'.

Stephen Bann has provided an interesting reading of the techniques of literary self-presentation inherent in this apparently minor scrap of marginalia added by a then old Canterbury cleric to an ephemeral collection of ecclesiastical prints, designed over two decades earlier for the tourist market at Rome:

Several things emerge, and are intended to emerge, from this fragment of Bargrave's biography, penned in 1679, the year before his death. First, there is the concern ... to present himself as a seasoned traveller, familiar with the sights of Italy, on speaking terms with the great men, and notable collectors, of his time. But then there is the wish to demonstrate, in his exchange with the 'Great Duke', that he is willing to overstep the boundaries of conventional politeness in order to defend the political cause that he holds dear, which indeed is inseparable from his identity as an English (and Kentish) gentleman.<sup>14</sup>

When viewed in this light, John Bargrave's biographical jotting is transformed from being a merely incidental travel memoir into a politicized interpolation on the role and duty of the royalist English traveller abroad, who, if necessary, should be willing even to correct Italian princes if the cause of his displaced king so requires.

This anecdote was added to John Bargrave's College of Cardinals almost two decades after the restoration of King Charles II; and the truth of his apparently bold encounter with the Duke of Florence sometime in the 1650s is now impossible to decipher. But John Bargrave's diary of his experiences in France in 1645 and 1646 (Canterbury Cathedral Archives, U11/8), is undoubtedly contemporaneous with these travels and bears testament to his awareness that fellow-travellers from other countries would often seek to define an Englishman abroad during the mid-1640s in relation to his adherence to either king or parliament. Having crossed from Dover to Calais on 23 May 1645 (or, as John Bargrave himself notes, 2 June 1646 New Style), with three young companions, John Raymond, Alexander Chapman, and John Richards (or Rycout), his party began to make its way towards Paris. At Beauvais a serious altercation broke out between John Bargrave and a group of eight Germans with whom he was travelling, four of whom had crossed the Channel with him on the same packet boat from Dover. Speaking in Latin (their one common language), one of the Germans explained that he was a 'noble mans sonn' who had innocently visited England 'only as a traveler to see it'. But, as Bargrave learned, officials at London had roughly confiscated from him various 'bookes, beads, crosses, and the like', fanning his hostility towards the English, of whom John Bargrave appears to have been little more than a conveniently vulnerable representative. Seeking retribution, the belligerent German persistently threatened Bargrave, ominously warning him that he was now 'not in England'. The situation suddenly became much more dangerous when Bargrave's own patience finally snapped:

upon which I told them that they should know they were not in Germany, and that I had hands and a weapon as well as he which was violent; and because he had thretned to be my death on the way to Paris, I desired him to goe single with mee and end the quarrell there, which his companions perceiving, they tooke him from his violence, and desiring to know my affections in the difference that was betweene the King and his subjects: I told them I was of no party, but by my Oathes I was bound to be obedient to my Sovereign and all the iourney after they were my very good freinds, and Tres humbles Servitures but I had an ey to the shavers pistolles. (fols. 5<sup>v</sup>-6<sup>r</sup>)

As with the account of his conversation with the Duke of Florence, John Bargrave is also clearly concerned in this passage with his own self-image as a bold and resolute traveller abroad. But, here, the defining moment in the heated interchange is seen to be Bargrave's plainly expressed allegiance to his sovereign, a simple gesture of such apparent potency that the aggression of the Germans immediately melts away (even though the ever-cautious Bargrave still keeps a wary eye on their pistols). As it stands, the passage reads as a striking, if slightly stage-managed, assertion of an essential aspect of Bargrave's sense of himself abroad, not only as an Englishman but also as an exiled royalist.

Such a self-image was firmly founded in reality since from the second decade of King James I's reign the fortunes of the Bargrave family had in no small measure been determined by their personal involvements with the monarchy and the established Church of England. In 1663 John Bargrave placed in Patricbourne Church a large black marble memorial stone to the memory of the Bargrave family which eloquently records (in Latin): 'In the Civil War on the King's side / The FAMILY stood and fell' and mournfully concludes: 'John the Heir from ruins / to ruins placed this stone / Year of our Lord 1663'.<sup>15</sup> The cause of this post-Restoration elegiac lament was, of course, the impact of the Civil War in Kent, the execution of the king in 1649, the loss of the Bargrave family fortunes, and the resulting dispersal of several members of the family abroad.

Three decades earlier, the Bargrave family had been very much in the ascendant in their home county. John Bargrave's father, John (d. c.1625) was the eldest son of Robert Bargrave (d. 1600), who had owned a tannery at Bridge in Kent. The financial means for rising above this respectable but unremarkable trade seems to have come from John's fortunate marriage in about 1597 to Jane, the daughter and co-heir of Giles Crouche, a wealthy London haberdasher. John's imposing family seat, Bifrons ('two-faced'), where our John Bargrave would have spent much of his childhood, gave monumental expression to the family's new-found status in county society.<sup>16</sup> In 1611 John Bargrave (d. c. 1625) received his grant of arms from William Camden ('Or, on a pale gules a sword erect argent, hilted and pomelled gold, on a chief azure three bezants. Crest: on a mount vert a pheon gules between two laurel branches proper'), marking, as Stephen Bann has noted, the family's smooth 'passage from yeoman to gentle status'.<sup>17</sup> While travelling abroad John Bargrave was particularly aware of the public potency of his status as an English gentleman, ensuring that the family crest was prominently incorporated into two portraits of him painted at Rome and Siena. In his French travel diary (Canterbury Cathedral Archives, U11/8) John Bargrave also recorded how in October 1645 at Bourges he and his charges, were then studying under the language master, Monsieur Mondon:

It is the Coustome in France for gentlemen to give either their armes or name, or both, to the severall Masters of excersice. Which Monseieur Mondon my Master of the language desiring of mee, hee left a handsome booke with mee wherein were diverse coates and names, in which I writt as followes. (fol. 44<sup>r</sup>)

The resulting coat of arms, which Bargrave proudly sketched into Monsieur Mondon's album - and then took the trouble to copy into his own diary - powerfully states the dual commitments of an exiled member of the Bargrave family during the mid-1640s: 'Fear God. Honour y<sup>e</sup> King' (Fig. 1).

Fig. 1: John Bargrave's family coat of arms. Canterbury Cathedral Archives, U11/8, fol. 44<sup>r</sup>. Reproduced by permission of Canterbury Dean and Chapter.

While the family of John Bargrave of Bifrons was steadily ascending into the levels of the wealthiest Kentish gentry during the reign of King James I, his younger brother, Isaac (the father of our other traveller, Robert), was enjoying comparable success in securing both court and church preferment. After studies at Pembroke College and Clare Hall, Cambridge, Isaac Bargrave was ordained at Peterborough on 10 May 1612.<sup>18</sup> From April 1616 until July 1618 he served as chaplain to the English ambassador at Venice, Sir Henry Wotton; and on 1 October 1618 he married Elizabeth Dering, a daughter of Wotton's sister, Elizabeth. Wotton's influence assisted Isaac in 1622 to a prebend's position at Canterbury and further honours came his way when he was appointed to the living of St Margaret's, Westminster, which involved serving as one of Prince Charles's personal chaplains. When his brother-in-law, Dean John Boys, died in September 1625, Isaac Bargrave succeeded to his position as Dean of Canterbury Cathedral on 16 October 1625. Soon after his marriage in 1618 Isaac Bargrave had probably taken up residence at Eastry Court in the village of Eastry, where his fourth son Robert (b. 1628) would have spent much of his childhood. With a growing young family to support during the 1620s and 1630s (Isaac and Elizabeth Bargrave had ten children, with four dying in infancy), Isaac proved an active, and sometimes interventionist, Dean of Canterbury but one who usually sought an essentially pragmatic line in matters of church and court politics. Above all, he maintained an unwavering public loyalty to his former royal charge; for example, preaching a sermon from I Samuel 15:23 before the king on 27 March 1627 which offered a resolute confirmation of the divine right of kings and (more implicitly) seemed also to lend its support to the collection of that year's arbitrary loan.<sup>19</sup>

However, following the opening of the Long Parliament on 30 November 1640, Isaac Bargrave experienced a series of rapid and ultimately fatal shifts in his personal fortune. In 1641 the Dean and Chapter of the Cathedral had agreed to the sale of some church plate and embroidery 'for the relief of the poor Irish protestants'. The phrasing of the order was probably drafted by Isaac Bargrave himself and its opening statement left no doubt over his own loyalties:

Whereas the bleeding estate of the Kingdom of Ireland together with the lamentable condicon of this Kingdome of England do call for the help and assistance of all his Maiesty's loyall and obedient subjects, We the Dean and Chapter being willing to expresse ourselves therein according to the utmost of our power ...<sup>20</sup>

Soon afterwards a bill for the abolition of the deans and chapters was introduced to the Long Parliament by Sir Edward Dering, Elizabeth Bargrave's first cousin (once removed), and Isaac was eventually fined £1,000 as a prominent member of convocation. Following the failure of the Battle of Petitions it seemed probable that Kent would staunchly support the position of the king. The Commission of Array was set up in the county before the parliamentary Militia Ordinance and on 16 July 1642 a 'great meeting' of several of the Kentish gentry families was held at the Deanery at Chartham, one of Dean Bargrave's houses.<sup>21</sup> The consequences of this meeting for Isaac Bargrave were catastrophic: in the following month, during the Dean's absence, Colonel Edwyn Sandys visited Canterbury and in retribution attacked the Deanery, grossly threatening Elizabeth Bargrave and other members of her family. Frustrated at not finding the Dean himself, Sandys hastened to Gravesend where he caught up with Bargrave, instigating his confinement in the Fleet Prison for three weeks without trial before being released without charge.<sup>22</sup> Seriously weakened by these experiences, Isaac Bargrave died in January 1643 and was buried in the Lady Chapel at Canterbury.

Predictably, the Kentish Rebellion of 1643, following the parliamentary attempt to administer the Covenant in the county, attracted the support of several members of Isaac Bargrave's own immediate circle. Most notably, his nephew, William Jarvis of Sturry, and Sir Thomas Peyton, whose sister had married in 1635 Robert Bargrave, the son of Isaac's eldest brother, John (and brother of our traveller, John Bargrave). As the situation steadily worsened in August 1643 Sir Thomas Peyton's three small children were sent to the relative safety of Bifrons, where Sir Thomas himself joined them in May 1644.<sup>23</sup> In the previous year, as already noted, Isaac's nephew, John Bargrave, had been ejected from his fellowship at Peterhouse, Cambridge, on account of his high-church beliefs and, very possibly, simply on account of his kinship with Dean Bargrave. Now bereft of both his Cambridge fellowship and a secure family home in Kent, John Bargrave's decision to absent himself from England in May 1645 was very probably the result of having no other viable options. It also seems certain that his cousin Robert Bargrave's own discreet departure abroad in April 1647 with the embassy of Sir Thomas Bendish was primarily motivated by a similar necessity.

The King's Loyal Subjects

Although when he left England in May 1645 John Bargrave knew no French, the international language of Latin proved an effective means of communication, especially when inspecting churches and other notable civic monuments.<sup>24</sup> By the mid-1640s there was also the expectation that an Englishman arriving at the French capital would be able to make reasonably easy contact with the growing community of English emigrés and fellow travellers who either already resided there or were in transit to other destinations.<sup>25</sup> John Bargrave's account of his first few weeks at Paris confirms just how readily such advice could be found by someone newly arrived in France:

[fol. 6<sup>v</sup>] About 5 at night wee came to Paris, alighted Au Croix de Ferr Rue Saint Martin (the Iron Cross in S<sup>t</sup> Martins streete) but (being directed by young M<sup>r</sup> Skinner)<sup>26</sup> went to the signe Au Ville Du Venice<sup>27</sup> in the Foburg of S<sup>t</sup> Germins, where the first man I met with was M<sup>r</sup> James Newman,<sup>28</sup> who saluted mee by my name: he was then lately come from Rome and the other parts of Italie. On Saturday the last of May I had an opportunity to talke above an howre with the Marquess of Newcastle,<sup>29</sup> and after that with the Earle of [space left for name] and the Lord German<sup>30</sup> whoe for the memorie of my uncle the Deane of Canterburie used me exceeding courteously. M<sup>r</sup> Cooly of Trin Coll Camb.<sup>31</sup> was the secretarie to the Lord ... [fol. 7<sup>r</sup>] On Sunday I went to S<sup>r</sup> Richard Browns<sup>32</sup> lodgings whoe was Agent for his Maiesty of England, where wee had read the English liturgie, and an English sermon by M<sup>r</sup> Crowder, chaplaine to the Lord Germie Earle of Yarmouth;<sup>33</sup> which being ended, wee received the sacrament in the forme appointed by the Church of England. On this day I mett with Dr Cosins<sup>34</sup> att the Looover (or Court) whoe is Master of the same Coll: whereof I am a [member deleted] fellow. viz. S<sup>t</sup> Pet Coll Cantabrig.

On munday the 12 of June I went to visit S<sup>r</sup> Thomas Stanly and his Lady<sup>35</sup> ... [fol. 7<sup>v</sup>] ... In the afternoone S<sup>r</sup> Thomas Stanley and his sonn caryed us to see the Pallace Roy[all?], the Arsenall (or towre) the Magazine ... [fol. 8<sup>r</sup>] The rest of the weeke was spent in seing the English Nunnerie, (whether I ledd the Lady Stanley to Church and there left her and her daughter) and other places of the City, as the Looover, the severall bridges, the Twileries, some Colleges &c. The Sorbon, Jesuits &c.

On Sunday we had an English sermon at S<sup>r</sup> R: Brownes logings, preached by Dr [space left for name] Bishop of Derry<sup>36</sup> in Ireland.<sup>37</sup>

Apart from providing newly arrived English travellers with help in finding accommodation and local contacts, the emigré community also circulated among themselves news from back home in England. By September 1645 John Bargrave had travelled from Paris through Épernon, Étampes, Artenay, and Pierrefitte, before arriving at Bourges. There he met:

an English gentleman that attended on the Prince of Condie, whoe came to Bourges that day: he said his name was M<sup>r</sup> Lambrone a Westmorland man, whoe told mee how his Lord the Prince of Condie had heard the state of England stooede at that time, of which I had not heard a word 10 weeks before. (fol. 35<sup>r-v</sup>)

The last events recorded in John Bargrave's French travel diary are dated February 1646 when he was resident at Orléans, having left Bourges on 31 January after a residence there of some eight months (fol. 64<sup>v</sup>). Although no written account of his experiences during the next year is known, it is known from John Raymond's Itinerary that their party continued their perambulation southwards through France before crossing by sea from Antibes to Genoa.<sup>38</sup> They must have been resident at Siena some time before Robert Bargrave met up with them in the early-summer of 1647 since Robert was certainly aware of their presence there (although he does not specify how) as soon as he himself had landed at Leghorn:

Being arrivd, & having a nett Porrent from England touching our health, we soon had prattick & went to Shoare; but having no acquaintance there of mine own, his Lordship very kindly ordred me handsom accomodation, as for one of his own retinue: Yet out of my Ambition for the Language, as to see my Cousins mr John Bargrave, & mr John Raymond then at Sienna, I put my Viaticum in my purse; & all alone adventurd thither, which is about 80: miles within the land. (fol. 6<sup>r</sup>)<sup>39</sup>

While Robert Bargrave was undoubtedly a much less experienced man than his older cousin John, both self-consciously presented themselves abroad as members of the dispossessed royalist gentry forced to earn a living overseas. While John had lost his Cambridge fellowship, Robert had lost his father and, with him, a previously secure and prominent position in Kent society. As he sailed out to the Levant aboard the London, he considered it important enough to note in the very first sentence of his travel diary that he had joined the party of 'Sir Thomas Bendyshe, with a double Commission as well from K. Charles then reigning as the Parliament then sitting, to succeed Sir Sackville Crow in the Embassy at Constantinople'.<sup>40</sup> Robert's pointed reference to Bendish's 'double Commission' implies a clear awareness of the complexity of an English ambassador's position in 1647. Bendish himself had already suffered greatly for the royalist cause through his close association with the Kentish Petition of 26 July 1642 that sought to establish a peaceful solution to the disputes between the Crown and Parliament. Instead, Bendish found himself serving two years in the Tower and had his estates in Essex sequestrated.<sup>41</sup> When he was released in 1644 he was fined £800 and banished from his home county, although these restraints were lifted in 1646 and soon followed by his appointment as English Ambassador to the Porte. While retaining his credibility with King

Fig. 2: Mattio Bolognini's portrait of John Bargrave (centre), Alexander Chapman, and John Raymond. Canterbury Cathedral Archives, MS Lit E16, fol. 77r. Reproduced by permission of Canterbury Dean and Chapter.

Charles I, and ultimately returning to England in honour after the Restoration of King Charles II, Bendish's experiences between 1642 and 1646 taught him a harsh lesson about the power of Parliament and the need to be circumspect in how he presented his support for the monarchy.<sup>42</sup> As Robert Bargrave records in his diary, Sir Thomas Bendish, who travelled out to Turkey with his wife, eldest son, and five daughters, was himself, in accepting the embassy to Constantinople, also undertaking - like John and Robert Bargrave - a form of political and personal exile from England.

While at Siena with John Raymond and Alexander Chapman, John Bargrave commissioned a painting in oils on copper of the three of them together by a (presumably) local artist, Mattio Bolognini (Fig. 2).<sup>43</sup> John Bargrave stands at the centre of the picture with his family arms clearly hung from a wall behind them and his two young charges on either side of him. They each hold with one hand a large map of Italy while John Bargrave, cast in the role of instructor, points to Siena as the centre of their intellectual and cultural pursuits. On an obvious level relating to their travels, the portrait endows itself with a provenance by literally indicating a particular point of geographical progress. But also, more implicitly, it may be read as a representation of three displaced Kentish exiles coming to terms with their asylum in a foreign country. In this sense, Bargrave's finger points not just to a traveller's chosen destination but also to an especially peaceful and provincial Italian location where an English stranger fleeing civil dissent at home could happily dwell in exile. As John Raymond himself notes in his Itinerary, Siena was then renowned for its hospitality to strangers and its natives were:

very courteous, a great deale suiting to the humours of foreigners, and besides the purity of the Italian language, is here profest, and spoken, these and the like conveniences make it much frequented by Travellers, and indeed mov'd us to settle our selves there, for some Moneths ... In a word, I found Sienna the most commodious place a stranger could pick out to live retiredly, and make his time beneficiall.<sup>44</sup>

Although Robert Bargrave was only in the company of John Bargrave and John Raymond for some three weeks, it is clear from his own travel diary, which describes several of the sights and buildings as detailed by Raymond in his Itinerary, that both the memory of their meeting and Raymond's volume were very much in his mind as his compiled his own accounts of Siena and Florence in Bodleian Library MS Rawlinson C 799. It is even possible that Robert's need as a tourist in 1647 for basic information about such locations as Siena and Florence first prompted John Bargrave and John Raymond to pen their invaluable guide for inexperienced English travellers in Italy.<sup>45</sup> However, when it reached print in 1648 Raymond's volume no longer merely presented itself as an innocent handbook for those interested in Italian geography and culture. It opened with a fulsome dedication to 'the Most Illustrious Prince Charles, Prince of Great Britaine':

It is humbly conceiv'd the duty of all the youth of ENGLAND to dedicate themselves and their endeavours to your HIGHNESSE: not only in regard of your Native but Acquired Greatnesse, which draws the eyes of all Good Men upon Your HIGHNESSE Person and Actions. This Sir Makes me humbly beg leave to lay my first fruits at Your HIGHNESSE feet, which (without farther Presumption) is the utmost Ambition of

Your Highnesse
most humble and most faithfully devoted

John Raymond (sigs. A3<sup>r</sup>-A4<sup>r</sup>)<sup>46</sup>

In his preface immediately following this dedication, Raymond claimed: 'My intention was to confine this wanderer to my Closet and no farther, till the advice of some familiar, and command of Superior Friends prest mee to exchange a single Manuscript for more Numerous Prints' (sigs. A4<sup>r-v</sup>). It seems particularly strange, then, that the name of his relative, tutor, and friend, John Bargrave, was not given at least some gracious mention in the preliminaries. Unless, of course, it was John Bargrave himself who explicitly desired that any references to the Bargrave family should be suppressed in the printed version. It seems feasible that Bargrave might have wished to protect his young charge from any public association with either himself, effectively a figure banished from Cambridge in disgrace, or his uncle, Dean Isaac Bargrave, driven from a position of prestige at Canterbury to an early death on account of his loyalty to the king. Furthermore, as Stephen Bann has explained, the fact that the Itinerary was 'prefaced by a highly inflammatory pro-Royalist statement, by the Cavalier propagandist and exile John Berkenhead, is sufficient proof that it was not simply being published as an innocent travelogue'. Berkenhead, writing of Amiens, addressed the reader of Raymond's Itinerary with an unequivocal gesture of loyalty to the beleaguered monarchy. He began his comments with the quip that such a guidebook was 'usefully done, since now so many of us are doom'd to wander, not like Cain for drawing blood, but for asking Peace'. He then offered both actual travellers and the armchair reader of Raymond's volume a memorable dissection of the dislocated state of England in 1648:

Now you are come home, you'll have stranger sights then any abroad; you'll see Great Brittain a Floating Island, and the most vertuous Monarch under Heaven cast into a small Isle as on some plank in a great Ship-wrack ... Sir, when you behold a Kingdome without a King, a Church without Clergy, a University without Scholars, you'll grant wee have a thorough Reformation. But two houres since I saw a better sight then Italy affords; 'tis His Highnesse the Prince of Wales, who for Soule and Body is sure the most hopefull Prince in the Christian World; whose comming hether this afternoone brings a flood of businesse (as well as joy) on all the English in this Towne. [pp. 11-12]

Through its printed preliminaries John Raymond's Itinerary was, in effect, translated from a mere travelogue to a full-blown statement of pro-royalist propaganda of especial appeal to those Englishmen driven abroad by their loyalty to the king.<sup>47</sup> Furthermore, with hindsight there is something disturbingly sombre about the coupling in the opening pages of the Itinerary of the young Raymond's hopeful dedication and the older Birkenhead's satiric prefatory address, both of which insistently depict Prince Charles as the real hope for the future, a tacit (and perhaps not even entirely conscious) admission of the impotence of the king's own position in early 1648 (following the vote of 'No Addresses' by Parliament in January and the outbreak of the Second Civil War in April).

The Kentish Rebellion of 1648 was a far more extensive affair than that of 1643 and is generally regarded as the last great local insurrection in English history. Sir Thomas Peyton, along with the Bargraves of Bifrons, Sir Henry Palmer (who had married Isaac Bargrave's widowed daughter, Anne), and several other influential local families, led support for the petition in their neighbourhood. As negotiations proceeded at Dover, the fleet then anchored in the Downs suddenly declared their allegiance to Kent and the king. Their mutiny had been encouraged by Sir Henry Palmer, a former naval officer, and by his close associates, Robert and Richard Bargrave, the elder brothers of Isaac. Palmer and Robert Bargrave were among those who flatly turned down Parliament's attempts to resolve the situation peaceably and in the second week of June they crossed over to Holland to secure Dutch support. They returned in July 1648, according to one report with 1,500 Dutchmen, just as the revolt in Sussex finally erupted.<sup>48</sup> By December, however, the tide had turned against them and on 11 December 1648 Robert Bargrave and Sir Henry Palmer, having fled abroad, were obliged to confess their involvement 'in the late commotion in Kent' and sought permission from the Committee for Compounding to return to England.<sup>49</sup> Six weeks later, however, on 30 January 1649 Parliament's monumentally dramatic gesture at Whitehall of the execution of King Charles I confirmed the irrevocable dislocation of the Bargraves from their former world of family prosperity and public patronage. Robert Bargrave of Bifrons (the elder brother of our John Bargrave the traveller) also died in 1649 and Sir Thomas Palmer's estates were sequestered in 1651.<sup>50</sup> One Thomas Bargrave of Eastry, almost certainly the elder brother of the diarist Robert, had also been involved in the rebellion of the fleet, as the entry in the Calendar of the Committee for Compounding makes clear: '[Thomas Bargrave:] Compounds for delinquency. Was captain of a frigate in the Prince's fleet, in the last summer's engagement at sea against Parliament. 9 August 1649. Fine £59'.<sup>51</sup>

'the deplorable Tragedie of our King in England'

When news of the execution of the king finally reached Constantinople, Robert Bargrave had been in exceptionally good spirits,

Map. 1. East Kent locations mentioned in the text having just been involved, as a break from commercial concerns, in the staging of 'two or three Comedies, with the reward of great Applause: Nor was our whole Conversation other then a various Scene of Mirth' (fol. 13<sup>v</sup>). Suddenly, 'the Tide of our Joy, turnd into a Streame of Grief first by the deplorable Tragedie of our King in England' (fol. 14<sup>r</sup>), compounded by the death by drowning of Sir Thomas Bendish's eldest son, Thomas, when his ship, the Talent, on its way to Jerusalem was attacked by a French boat.<sup>52</sup> On his third voyage, Robert Bargrave's ship picked up at the Morea another member of the Raymond family, Thomas (c. 1610-c. 1681), an almost exact contemporary of John Bargrave, who was either a brother or cousin of John Raymond. This Thomas Raymond's autobiography has fortunately survived (Bodleian Library MS Rawlinson D 1150), and it indicates that he knew well the family of Dean Isaac Bargrave and had been accustomed during the 1630s to visiting them at Canterbury.<sup>53</sup> Thomas Raymond's response to the royal execution was as horrified as Robert Bargrave's. In his autobiography, most (if not all) of which was probably penned after the Restoration, Thomas Raymond recalled, with undisguised delight, one telling incident:

Soone after our most gracious King Charles the First was by hellish miscreants sonnes of Belial put to death, it was my chance to be in London at sermon in St. Mary Alder-Maryes Church, it being death then for any man and especially ministers to speake in vindication of that good King. The preacher fell to aggravate the great synnes whereof we were guilty and haveing instanced in severall greate and crying ones, 'Nay,' said he, 'wee have put to death our King, our most gracious and good King' - at which he made a little pause (the people amazed and gazing about expecting the preacher should be pulled out of the pulpitt) but he added - 'the Lord Jesus Christ by our sinnes and transgression'.<sup>54</sup>

Similarly, in his notes to the portrait of Cardinal Bernardino Spada, John Bargrave recorded how Dr Gibbs, an English physician at Rome in the retinue of this cardinal, had given him a Latin hexastichon, which Bargrave pointedly translated and added sometime after 1662 to his College of Cardinals - as one of the very few items of verse included in this collection:

Of the King of England's Death, and the Kingdom Turned into a Republic.
An Epigram of Cardinal Spada's.

The axe is for the private subjects' necks,
And not for kings. O horrid monstrous sects!
The kingdom with the king in sunder's cut,
As from the other world the island's shut.
That Commonwealth with ill birds doth begin,
Where th'axe is made by them a common thing.<sup>55</sup>

Such resolutely condemnatory (but, of course, post-Restoration) comments by the Bargraves and Raymonds also raise the issue of exactly when Robert Bargrave compiled the Bodleian Library Rawlinson C 799 manuscript of his travels between 1647 and 1656. The meticulously written manuscript was clearly intended as a 'fair copy', presumably drawn together from either an earlier draft or compiled from various notes and diary records jotted down during his four voyages. If the Bodleian Library polished draft of these memoirs were written up as a purely private document soon after his return home to England in March 1656, then Robert's frequent gestures of royalist devotion may simply be regarded as an honest - but also potentially risky - committing to paper of his personal adherences in the period either immediately before or during the second Protectorate Parliament (September 1656-June 1657). But if, as is entirely possible and perhaps more likely, he compiled the manuscript in the months immediately after the Restoration of King Charles II, then his account of his travels may also be regarded as an implicit attempt to document early in the new reign his own personal credentials as a loyal royalist and man of international affairs.

Whatever the case, one of the most noticeable aspects of Robert Bargrave's diary is its insistent commemoration of its author's personal contacts with emigré royalists during his travels. Throughout his European travels, he enjoyed a privileged access to exiled members of Charles II's entourage and to former supporters of King Charles I. At Danzig, for example, he was hospitably entertained by George Cock, formerly treasurer to William Cavendish, later Duke of Newcastle (fol. 79<sup>r</sup>). While at Hamburg he met up with his cousin, Charles Dering, a member of another staunchly royalist Kentish family (fol. 86<sup>v</sup>); and at Madrid he struck up a friendship with 'Colonell Waters' (fol. 147<sup>v</sup>) who, from his title and presence in Spain, was almost certainly another royalist exile. But the first of what were Robert Bargrave's two most important meetings with royal emigrés took place at The Hague in February 1653 where he met Elizabeth, Queen of Bohemia (the daughter of King James I); the renowned Lady Jane Lane, who had assisted Charles II in his escape from England, disguised as her manservant, after the Battle of Worcester in 1651; and Lady Stanhope, Catherine Kirkhoven (d. 1667), formerly the governess of Charles I's eldest daughter, Mary, the Princess Royal. In 1641 Princess Mary had married William, son of Frederick Henry, Prince of Orange, and her court had become an important focus of support for Charles II and his brother, James, until contact was forbidden by the Dutch States on the outbreak of the war between England and Holland in 1652. Lady Stanhope, 'the greatest Beauty there', as Robert Bargrave admiringly calls her, had only recently returned to The Hague, after being arrested and tried in England on account of her royalist connections (fols. 94<sup>r-v</sup>).

On his fourth and last journey in March 1656 Bargrave arrived at Heidelberg, where he was warmly welcomed at the court of Elizabeth of Bohemia's son, the Palsgrave Charles Louis, who introduced Bargrave to various members of his own family, including his renowned brother, Prince Rupert and his sisters, Elizabeth and Sophia (fols. 185<sup>v</sup>-186<sup>r</sup>). Heidelberg was the capital of the Rhine Palatinate and, as Bargrave records in his diary, the contact enjoyed by his father, Isaac, with the court of Frederick and Elizabeth at Heidelberg in 1616 was fondly recalled by the Palsgrave himself:

After church, the day following our arrivall, I was sent for to the Palsgrave, when having all of us kissed his hands, he honourd me with about an howres discourse after which the Palsgrave, with Prince Rupert, and the Palsgraves Sonn, his Princess (daughter to the Landtgrave van Hess) together with Princess Elizabeth and Princess Sophia (his Sisters) sate doune to Dinner: Being sett, by the Palsgraves order I was made sitt at the table with them; when the Palsgrave soon ask'd me if I were related to Doctor Bargrave dean of Canterbury; which having heard from me, he straight after drank to me, and discoursed with me much of dinner time. (f. 185<sup>v</sup>)

This conversation, which continued after dinner, provided one of the highlights of Robert Bargrave's journey home from Venice to England. The Palsgrave Charles Louis freely expressed his affection for the Bargrave family, and after hearing about Robert's earlier experiences in Turkey, requested (perhaps somewhat disappointingly for Robert Bargrave who may have been hoping for a more politically relevant commission from the Palsgrave) 'a description of the great Turkes Seraglio' (f. 186<sup>r</sup>). Robert was clearly deeply moved by the hospitality shown to him at Heidelberg and by how the memory of his father, Dean Isaac Bargrave, was still honoured within this Anglo-German royal family. On departing Heidelberg, he neatly expressed his sentiments in the Latin epithet: 'Quam Faelix est, virtuoso Patri Filius, esse' ('How happy it is to be the son to [i.e. of] a virtuous father'). It was especially poignant that such a patriarchal benefit could, of course, now only be enjoyed by Robert Bargrave abroad.

The rest of the party's journey home was largely uneventful. Leaving Heidelberg on 10 March, they arrived at Frankfurt on the following day, passed through Mainz on the 12 March, and hoped to reach Cologne by the next evening. But bad weather restricted movement on the Rhine and they were forced to put up overnight in a small unnamed village: 'where the only enjoyment we had, was to lodge in the house where the King of England, the Duke of Yorke and Prince Rupert had all lodged but newly before us' (fol. 188<sup>r</sup>). Robert Bargrave's pointed emphasis here on naming Charles as 'the King of England', whether written in 1656 or 1660, is entirely unequivocal. Four days later, he visited Henry Stewart, Duke of Gloucester and Earl of Cambridge (the third surviving son of King Charles I), who was then resident at Cologne with Sir Gilbert Talbot and Admiral Sir John Mennes, the commander of Charles I's navy in 1645 (fols. 189<sup>r-v</sup>). Still hampered by bouts of bad weather, they headed on through Düsseldorf, Wesel, Rheinberg, Rees, Emmerich and Nijmegen, reaching Dordrecht on 24 March. From there they made rapid progress to Flushing, where Bargrave agreed terms with a Captain Bunker, the commander of a convoy ship, for his party's passage to England. They reached Thanet on 29 March 1656 and braved mountainous seas in a small landing craft so as to hasten their family reunions.

The Bargraves and the Restoration

On this final journey home, prior to his visit to the court of the Palsgrave Charles Louis at Heidelberg, Robert Bargrave had visited Augsburg. He was both surprised and delighted to meet up with his cousin, John Bargrave, and his young charge, William Juxon, who were then resident there. Once again acting as Robert's travel guide, John Bargrave filled the next three days by taking him to see the great Fuggerhaus at Augsburg, the city's watermills and fountains, and various displays of fine local metalwork. In particular both men were fascinated by intricate examples of the 'incomparable watchwork' produced by the skilled craftsmen of the city. Together they pored over various mechanical musical boxes, miniature orchestras, and, most remarkable of all, a mechanical coach 'which by Engines withinside, (governed by those who sitt in it) has been driven round the Streets of Agosta, so that it seemd to the Spectators to goe of its own accord' (fol. 182<sup>r-v</sup>). Regretfully leaving 'the enjoyment of m<sup>r</sup> Juxon & my Cousin m<sup>r</sup> Bargraves Company', Robert Bargrave and his party pressed on to Ulm, which they reached on 5 March.

Sadly, this may have been the last time that the two men were able to meet. Between his return to England in March 1656 and the accession of King Charles II on 29 May 1660, Robert probably spent some time either at Canterbury or at one of the Bargraves' Kentish residences, such as Eastry Court or Bifrons.<sup>56</sup> His career prospects were significantly enhanced by his appointment at some point before the Restoration as personal secretary to Heneage Finch, second Earl of Winchilsea (1628-89). For several years, Winchilsea had been a powerful force among Kentish royalists and his loyalty was rapidly rewarded by King Charles II with the Lord-Lieutenancy of the county, the Wardenship of the Cinque Ports, and finally the embassy to Constantinople. On 20 October 1660 Winchilsea sailed from the Downs on the Plymouth, along with two Levant Company ships, the Prosperous and the Smyrna Factor. Also on board the Plymouth was Winchilsea's new private secretary, Paul Rycaut, and Robert Bargrave himself, who at the age of thirty-two had recently been appointed (probably through Winchilsea's influence) as the new secretary in Constantinople. The holder of this post, a position of considerable prominence and responsibility in Turkey, was elected by the general court of the company in London and received the then considerable salary £150 a year. Bargrave's major duty would have been to serve as chancellor of the company's factory at Constantinople but his new role was also of no small diplomatic importance since he would have been expected to deputize for Winchilsea, in the case of the ambassador's absence, illness, or death.

Robert Bargrave, as he embarked from the Downs with his wife Elizabeth, must have held high hopes for a long and distinguished career in commercial and public service. Through his appointment as Secretary at the Porte, his branch of the family seemed well on their way back to a restitution of their former fortunes and privileged royal connections during the reign of King Charles I. But as the Plymouth finally arrived at Smyrna for the Christmas and New Year season of 1660-1, Robert Bargrave was laid low by a severe fever and was too ill to travel on to Constantinople. He was left behind in the care of his wife but his subsequent death was reported on 9 February 1661 to Winchilsea, then safely arrived at Constantinople, in a brief note jotted down among other business and political memoranda from the English Consul at Smyrna, Richard Baker:

Your servant m<sup>r</sup> Bargrave is dead & buried at Santa Venáranda whither wee all accompanied him; his wife most disconsolate & to be admired for her love & care of him.<sup>57</sup>

Paul Rycaut was appointed in June 1661 to Bargrave's Secretaryship and for the next six years held this post in tandem with his own as private secretary to the ambassador. The Earl of Winchilsea had come to Constantinople to take over the embassy from the retiring ambassador, Sir Thomas Bendish, who boarded the Plymouth on 7 March for his return journey to England. Accompanying him was Robert Bargrave's widow, Elizabeth, beginning her sad journey back home to Kent. If she had with her a copy of her late husband's travel diary and perhaps sometimes browsed through it as a means of occupying the hours during the long sea voyage home, she would have been touched by the sad contrast in their respective sea journeys across the Mediterranean in the company of Sir Thomas Bendish. Just as Robert in 1647 had first sailed out to Turkey on board the London, accompanied by the entourage of ambassador Bendish, who was then on his way out to take up his new embassy at Constantinople, so in 1661 Robert's widow, returning in mourning, found herself travelling home with Sir Thomas at the end of his long service in Turkey.<sup>58</sup>

John Bargrave was more fortunate than his cousin, Robert, in having some two decades after the Restoration during which to enjoy some of the fruits of the Bargrave family's unwavering loyalty to the monarchy. In his College of Cardinals at the bottom of the publisher's Latin dedication to Pope Alexander VII, Bargrave wrote in 1662:

The College of Cardinalls when I was my fourth and laste tyme at Rome, I being then there when King Charles the Second was restored to his three crownes, and to my knowledge to the great greife of that triple crowne and that college, whoe thought to have binn masters of England, 1660.<sup>59</sup>

Following this joyful news, he seems to have made his way rapidly back to England, determined to secure some of the rewards which, with ample reason, he felt were due to himself and his family name. By 2 August 1660 his fellowship at Peterhouse had been recovered and in the following November he was recommended, by royal mandate, for the degree of Doctor of Divinity. On 23 December he was ordained to the priesthood by Bishop Sanderson of Lincoln at the Barbican Chapel, London. Now qualified for preferment in the Church, and doubtless through Archbishop Juxon's personal patronage, John Bargrave was appointed as a preacher at Canterbury Cathedral. He was also presented to the rectory of Harbledown in September 1661 and to Pluckley in July 1662. But one more preferment still remained in the restoration of the Bargraves to their former position of pre-eminence at Canterbury Cathedral.<sup>60</sup>

In May 1662 John Bargrave personally petitioned King Charles II for the position of a prebend at Canterbury. The exact phrasing of this document, recalling Bargrave's personal loyalty to the king and sufferings for his allegiance to the established church, is particularly evocative of his history as an exiled royalist:

To the King's Most Excellent Majestie.

The humble petition of John Bargrave, D.D., Humbly sheweth,

That there being a Prebendaries Place in y<sup>e</sup> Cathedrall Church of Canterbury now voyd by y<sup>e</sup> death of Doctor Paske, and your petitioner being of knowne loyalty to your Majestie and a true sone of y<sup>e</sup> Church of England, for which he hath beene a great sufferer,

Most humbly prayes that your Majestie wilbe graciously pleased to conferr the said Prebendaries place upon him.<sup>61</sup>

This application, supported by Gilbert Sheldon, Bishop of London, was successful and on 26 September 1662, in what must have been an especially poignant moment, John Bargrave was inducted into the fifth stall which had previously been occupied by his uncle, Isaac Bargrave, before his elevation to the Deanery.

The Bargrave family's wealth, however, could not be regained by a mere prebend of Canterbury and John Bargrave's family home, Bifrons, was sold to Sir Arthur Slingsby towards the end of 1661, as recorded by Henry Oxinden, a long-time neighbour and friend of the family: 'Bifrons, a house that was my brother Bargrave's, beside Bridge hill, was lately sold'.<sup>62</sup> From 1662 John Bargrave's home, which he held for life, was his prebendal lodgings at the Cathedral. Before settling into his new duties he undertook one more major trip abroad - but this time at the personal request of his king. A petition had been presented to King Charles II on behalf of some three hundred British subjects held in captivity at Algiers and, following a widespread appeal, some £10,000 had been raised to pay their ransom from captivity. John Bargrave and John Selleck, Archdeacon of Bath, were instructed in a licence dated 16 September 1662, to go to Algiers and to negotiate the release of as many captives as their gold could buy. With this mission completed by January 1663, John Bargrave made his way back to Canterbury. It appears that a significant number of slaves were released and Bargrave made a gift of a picture, drawn by an Italian slave, to 'his Ma<sup>tie</sup> Charles the Second, who hanged it in his private closet'.<sup>63</sup> Two years later on 26 March 1665, John Bargrave, then aged about 55 years, married a financially well-endowed Canterbury widow, Frances Osborne. With his personal and ecclesiastical life now secure, one of John Bargrave's final acts as the guardian of the Bargraves' family history was to set up in 1679 an imposing memorial to Dean Isaac Bargrave in the Lady Chapel, with a painted portrait, probably taken during his lifetime, set into the cartouche, attributed to Cornelius Janssen (Johnson). This memorial, along with the 1663 memorial slab in Patricxbourne Church, reiterates John Bargrave's interpretation of the family's dual identity as martyrs through their loyalty to their monarch and the true church.<sup>64</sup> Less than a year later, on 11 May 1680, John Bargrave died and was buried in the north-west transept of the Cathedral.

Through their various writings, John and Robert Bargrave both found a means of recording their pre-occupations with royalist history and the fate of their own family, along with preserving their personal reputations as well-travelled men of the world. It is important to reiterate here that their various written records of travels and royal service span the period both before and after the Restoration. John Bargrave's French travel diary was clearly compiled on a day-to-day basis during his actual travels in 1645 and 1646. John Raymond's Itinerary was also written and published, almost certainly using John Bargrave's own notes, in late-1647 and 1648. In contrast, John Bargrave's College of Cardinals and the catalogue to his collections were steadily augmented from the Restoration until 1679, the year before John Bargrave's death. Robert Bargrave's travel diary was probably written up from contemporaneous notes just after the Restoration, perhaps to mark his appointment as Secretary in Constantinople. This was a position of enough seniority, certainly to Robert Bargrave's own eyes at least, to merit the compilation of a biographical history of the youthful experiences abroad of its holder. At the same time, Robert was also able to confirm through these memoirs his pedigree as an ultra-loyal royalist and as member of a proud Kentish family who had suffered greatly for their king during the English Civil War. If he had not suddenly died at Smyrna in 1661, it seems very likely that Robert would have intended to continue his activities as a writer and historian. In fact, this role seems to have been appropriated by the individual who (innocently) gained most from Robert Bargrave's death - Paul Rycout - who was rapidly appointed to Bargrave's company secretaryship and for the next six years held this post in tandem with his own as private secretary to the ambassador. During the next four decades Rycout established himself as one of England's most important and prolific historians.<sup>65</sup> Although neither John nor Robert Bargrave deserved to be ranked alongside Paul Rycout in terms of the academic importance of their historical writings, their written records remain a full and often moving testament to the sufferings of the Bargrave family of Kent during the English Civil War.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The author is very grateful to Dr M. M. N. Stansfield, former Archivist, Canterbury Cathedral Archives, and to Sonia Anderson, Assistant Keeper, Historical Manuscripts Commission, for their advice and assistance during his work on the Bargrave family.

NOTES

<sup>1</sup> John Bargrave had matriculated from St Peter's College (Peterhouse) on 8 July 1629 and was awarded BA (1633) and MA (1636) before being elected a fellow (1637).

<sup>2</sup> See Stephen Bann, Under the Sign. John Bargrave as Collector, Traveler, and Witness (Ann Arbor, 1994), 46, for John Bargrave's statement that as a pupil at the King's School, Canterbury, he used to spend weekends at the Chartham deanery, one of Dean Isaac Bargrave's residences.

<sup>3</sup> Robert Bargrave's account of his meeting with John Bargrave in Italy is recorded in The Travel Diary of Robert Bargrave, Levant Merchant 1647-1656, ed. Michael G. Brennan, The Hakluyt Society, 3rd series, no. 3 (London, 1999), 15-18, 60-5.

<sup>4</sup> Chapman may have been either the son or nephew of Alexander Chapman (d. 1629), formerly a prebendary of Canterbury. In his French travel diary (Canterbury Cathedral Archive, U11/8), John Bargrave describes John Richards as 'Young Mr Rickad Sr Peter Rickads sonn Of Kent in England' (fol. 26<sup>v</sup>). This individual was probably, John, the third surviving son of Sir Peter Rycout, who was knighted by Charles I in 1641 and held extensive estates in Kent. Another of his sons, Paul (1629-1700), travelled with Robert Bargrave to the Levant in 1661. See Sonia P. Anderson, An English Consul in Turkey. Paul Rycout at Smyrna, 1667-1678 (Oxford, 1989), 298; and The Travel Diary of Robert Bargrave, ed. Brennan, 35, 42-4, 54. Yet another of his sons, Peter (1615-85), travelled between 1644 and 1646 with Thomas Denne of Kent and Sir Clippesby Crewe through France and the Low Countries. See British Library, Additional MS 28,010, fols 55-8; and Dorothy Gardinèr, 'Some Travel Notes During the Thirty Years' War', History ns 25 (1940-1), 14-24; and Anderson, An English Consul, 21-4, 248-9.

<sup>5</sup> Philip Stanhope (1633-1713) succeeded his grandfather, Philip (1584-1656) as Earl of Chesterfield. In his Pope Alexander the Seventh and the College of Cardinals, ed. by James Craigie Robertson, Camden Society 92 (1867), 11, 16, Bargrave records how Queen Henrietta Maria, then in exile at Paris, wrote a letter of recommendation for him to Cardinal Capponi at Rome and another to her sister, the Duchess of Savoy, at Turin, who wrote on Bargrave's behalf to Cardinal Panzirola.

<sup>6</sup> In his Pope Alexander, ed. Robertson, 11-12, John Bargrave describes this individual as 'now Sir William Swan, baronet' and the son-in-law of Sir Thomas Peyton. Another of Peyton's daughters, Elizabeth, married Robert Bargrave, the eldest brother of our traveller, John Bargrave.

<sup>7</sup> For further details of John Bargrave's travels, see Pope Alexander, ed. Robertson, x-xi, xx-xxii; John Stoye, English Travellers Abroad 1605-1667. Their Influence in English Society and Politics (Revised Edition, New Haven and London, 1989), 135-6, 151, 161-3; Bann, Under the Sign, 63-98; and The Travel Diary of Robert Bargrave, ed. Brennan, 15-17, 31, 36, 50-1, 60-5.

<sup>8</sup> See Bann, Under the Sign, 3-7, 74-6, 82-3, and David Sturdy and Martin Henig, The Gentle Traveller. John Bargrave, Canon of Canterbury and his Collection (Canterbury, 1985).

<sup>9</sup> Anthony à Wood, Athenae Oxonienses ... To Which Are Added, The Fasti or Annals, of the Said University to the Year 1690, 2 vols (London, 1691-2), II, col. 828. Raymond's Itinerary is also commonly known as Il Mercurio Italico from the phrase used on its illustrated frontispiece. After the Restoration its popularity among English travellers to Italy was superseded by Edmund Warcup's, Italy, in its Original Glory, Ruine and Revival (1660).

<sup>10</sup> For John Bargrave's possible role in compiling the Itinerary, see Pope Alexander, ed. Robertson, xxi; Sturdy and Henig, The Gentle Traveller, item (b); and Bann, Under the Sign, 107-113, 132.

<sup>11</sup> The autograph manuscript of Robert Bargrave's travels (MS Rawlinson C 799) was deposited in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, as part of the bequest of Richard Rawlinson in 1756. Another, now lost manuscript of these travels was at Eastray Court near Sandwich, Robert Bargrave's childhood home, until at least the mid-1830s. See The Travel Diary of Robert Bargrave, ed. Brennan, 43-51.

<sup>12</sup> Isaac Bargrave was presumably in attendance on 14 June 1625 when his brother-in-law, John Boys, as Dean of Canterbury preached in the cathedral before Charles I and Henrietta Maria, who had landed only two days previously at Dover. Bann, Under the Sign, 30-1, examines the links between the the Boys and Bargrave families.

<sup>13</sup> The Travel Diary of Robert Bargrave, ed. Brennan, 1, 7-10.

<sup>14</sup> Pope Alexander, ed. Robertson, 89. Bann, Under the Sign, 12.

<sup>15</sup> 'Stetit et cecidit FAMILIA ... Iohan Haeres a ruinis in Ruinas lapide posuit An: Dñi M DC LXIII'. The memorial is translated and reproduced in Bann, Under the Sign, 25, and figure 7.

<sup>16</sup> The early history of the Bargrave family is examined in more detail in Bann, Under the Sign, 28-45 and The Travel Diary of Robert Bargrave, ed. Brennan, 6-7. See also Philip H. Blake, 'The Builder of Bifrons', Archaeologia Cantiana, cviii (1990), 270.

<sup>17</sup> Bann, Under the Sign, 34-5.

<sup>18</sup> In 1614 Isaac Bargrave was appointed as rector of Eythorne, a position which he held until his death in 1643.

<sup>19</sup> This sermon was printed as A Sermon Preached Before King Charles (1627). Isaac Bargrave's dealings with Archbishop Laud and other aspects of his church career are examined in The Travel Diary of Robert Bargrave, ed. Brennan, 7-11. See also Stephen Bann's entry on Isaac Bargrave for the New Dictionary of National Biography (forthcoming). The author is grateful to Professor Bann for allowing him to see the typescript of this article.

<sup>20</sup> See C. Eveleigh Woodruff, 'Church Plate in Kent. Canterbury Cathedral', Archaeologia Cantiana, xxviii (1909), 145-55; and idem 'Some Seventeenth Century Letters and Petitions from the Muniments of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury', Archaeologia Cantiana, xlii (1930), 117.

<sup>21</sup> Alan Everitt, The Community of Kent and the Great Rebellion, 1640-1660 (Leicester, 1966), 109, citing BL Additional MS 28,000, fol. 213; and M. J. Sparks and E. W. Parkin, 'The Deanery, Chartham', Archaeologia Cantiana, lxxxix (1974), 169-82.

<sup>22</sup> Bann, Under the Sign, 60, recounts how Thomas Bargrave, the Dean's son, had his sword broken by Colonel Sandys 'before his face' and was placed in confinement at Dover Castle. Angela (Bargrave) Boys, the Dean's sister and the widow of Dean Boys, had some gold coins confiscated, although they were later returned. See also Edward Hasted, The History and Topographical Survey of the County of Kent, 4 vols (Canterbury, 1778-99), IV, 593-4; and A History of Canterbury Cathedral, eds. Patrick Collinson, Nigel Ramsay, and Margaret Sparks (Oxford, 1995), 195-6. In August 1642 Colonel Sandys had also arrested Sir Peter Rycout who ended up in the Tower of London. See Anderson, An English Consul, 21.

<sup>23</sup> Everitt, The Community of Kent, 190-1. The Oxinden and Peyton Letters 1642-1670. Being the correspondence of Henry Oxinden of Barham, Sir Thomas Peyton of Knowlton and their circle, ed. Dorothy Gardiner (London, 1937), 23-4, 30, 46-9.

<sup>24</sup> John Bargrave records, for example, that at Calais he visited the convent of the Minims: 'Wee being in the Chappell One of the order (an ancient man) being sweeping of it, came to mee and spake french, but I answered him in Latine (having not as yet the french Language) he replied in Latine that I was welcome' (fol. 3<sup>v</sup>). Bargrave's acrimonious dispute with the Germans, discussed earlier, was also conducted entirely in Latin. As his proficiency in the French language increased, so Bargrave often 'mingled latin and french together' (fol. 53<sup>r</sup>) as did many of the Jesuits whom he met on his travels.

<sup>25</sup> Initial contact with other English visitors was often made with the help of the landlord of the inn at which the visitors were staying. Such a service was generally expected and, on one of the rare occasions when it was not forthcoming, at the 'Barrelet' at Orléans, Bargrave commented: 'the Host of the howse saide the English men were good for nothing but to take Tobacco, and was very surly to us, so that wee cold not gett him to send a messenger for to speake with any English gentlemen to come unto us or shew us to them' (fol. 8<sup>v</sup>).

<sup>26</sup> This 'young M<sup>r</sup> Skinner' was perhaps a son or relative of Robert Skinner (1591-1667), Bishop of Bristol (1636-41) and Oxford (1641-63), who had been committed to the Tower of London in 1641. Alternatively, it may have been the physician, Stephen Skinner (1623-67), who took the degree of MD at Heidelberg in 1654 and spent much of his youth on the continent; or one of the Skinners, such as Edward (Jesus, matriculated 1641) or Joseph (Jesus, 1644), who were at Cambridge at about the same time as John Bargrave. See Alumni Cantabrigienses ... from the Earliest Times to 1900. Part I. From the Earliest Times to 1751, compiled by John Venn and J. A. Venn, 4 vols (Cambridge, 1922-7).

<sup>27</sup> The Hôtel (or Ville) de Venise, near the Pont Neuf in the rue de Bussy (Buci), was often recommended to English visitors between 1590 and 1650. See The Diary of John Evelyn, ed. E. S. de Beer, 6 vols. (Oxford, 1955), II, 90; and The Travel Diary (1611-1612) of an English Catholic Sir Charles Somerset, ed. Michael G. Brennan (Leeds, 1993), 70.

<sup>28</sup> Bargrave does not supply enough detail to identify positively this 'M<sup>r</sup> James Newman'. However, he may have been one of his contemporaries from Cambridge and/or Canterbury, perhaps the James Newman of Canterbury who matriculated at St Catharine's (1634), took an LL.B from Trinity Hall (1639), and entered Lincoln's Inn (1641). See Alumni Cantabrigienses (note 26).

<sup>29</sup> William Cavendish (c. 1593-1676), Earl (1628), Marquis (1643), and Duke (1665) of Newcastle, was one of King Charles I's most capable military leaders. After the Battle of Marston Moor (1644), he fled abroad to Hamburg (July 1644-February 1645), and then on to Paris (1645-8) and Antwerp (1648-60). He had acted as governor to Prince Charles from 1638 until 1641 and accompanied him back in triumph to London in 1660. See The Travel Diary of Robert Bargrave, ed. Brennan, 13, 27, 153 n. 9.

<sup>30</sup> Bargrave is referring here to Henry Jermyn (d. 1684), who was created Baron Jermyn of St Edmundsbury in 1643 and Earl of St Albans in 1660. He was appointed as vice-chamberlain to the queen in 1628 and escaped to France in 1641 after the 'First Army Plot'. He returned to England in 1643 but crossed back to France with the queen in the following year. His coded letters written on her behalf to Lord Digby, the king's private secretary, were intercepted and published by Parliament. See The Lord George Digby's Cabinet (1646). Henry Jermyn was also informally known as the Earl of Yarmouth during the 1640s. See The Calendar of the Committee for the Advance of Money, Domestic, 1642-1656, Part II, 640, 17 November 1645, recording an assessment of: 'Hen. Jermyn, now Earl of Yarmouth (sic), £4,000'. In official terms, Sir Robert Paston (1631-83) was created first Earl of Yarmouth in 1679.

<sup>31</sup> No suitable individual named 'Cooly' (or Colley, Cooley, Coolie, Cooily) is recorded in Alumni Cantabrigienses as a member of Trinity College, Cambridge. However, a Mr 'Pooly' does appear in Henry Jermyn's correspondence in 1645. See Calendar of State Papers, Domestic, 1645-7, 31-2 (although no such individual is listed as a member of Trinity College).

<sup>32</sup> Sir Richard Browne (1605-83), was resident at the French court as the representative of King Charles I and Charles II, 1641-60. At Paris he provided a chapel for Anglican services, a refuge for displaced Anglican clergymen, and a cemetery for Protestants. John Evelyn married his daughter, Mary. See Evelyn, Diary, II, 90.

<sup>33</sup> Probably Joseph Crowther, who was a fellow of St John's College, Oxford, from 1628 until 1648. He had been ejected as a prebend of St Paul's in 1642. He later became Regius Professor of Greek at Oxford. See Evelyn, Diary, II. 564, III. 19, 37-8.

<sup>34</sup> John Cosin (1594-1672), a friend of Archbishop Laud, was the Master of Peterhouse, Cambridge. He became Vice-chancellor of Cambridge in 1639 and Dean of Peterborough in 1640. He was deprived of his benefices by the Long Parliament in the same year. After sending Peterhouse plate to Charles I in 1642 he was ejected from his Mastership. He served as chaplain to the Anglican royalists at Paris from 1642 until the Restoration.

<sup>35</sup> This was possibly Sir Thomas Stanley of Cumberlow, Hertfordshire, and Leytonstone, Essex, an ardent royalist, whose son, Thomas Stanley (1625-78) was certainly in France at this period and later gained some renown for his Poems (1647). In the Calendar of the Committee for the Advance of Money, Domestic, 1642-1656, Part I, 389, 15 May 1644, this Sir Thomas Stanley is described as wishing to 'stir abroad'. See also Part III, 1439.

<sup>36</sup> Dr John Bramhall (1594-1663) was consecrated as Bishop of Derry on 26 May 1634, later transferring to become Archbishop of Armagh on 18 January 1661. He was impeached by the Irish Commons for his opposition to the Covenanters and imprisoned but liberated through the influence of Archbishop James Ussher in 1641. He crossed to England in 1644 and lent his support to the royalists but later in the same year was forced to retire to the Continent.

<sup>37</sup> Elsewhere in his French travel diary, John Bargrave also records meeting 'M<sup>r</sup> Ja: Brockman of Kent in England and M<sup>r</sup> Wil. Johnson of Middlesex or Suffolke, my very worthy friends' (fols. 31<sup>v</sup>, 40<sup>r</sup>, 66<sup>v</sup>); and 'Mr ... Richot [i.e. Rycout] an English gentleman' (fol. 31<sup>v</sup>).

<sup>38</sup> Raymond's Itinerary notes: 'There are but two ordinary passages out of France into Italy, the one over the Alpes, the other by the Mediterranean Sea, those commonly which goe by the first, returne by the second, and so contrary. We (November being quite expired ere we left France) for our owne convenience preferred a boate'.

<sup>39</sup> The Travel Diary of Robert Bargrave, ed. Brennan, 60.

<sup>40</sup> Ibid., 53.

<sup>41</sup> Peter Rycout the younger was also imprisoned for his part in drawing up this petition. See Anderson, An English Consul, 21.

<sup>42</sup> Calendar of the Proceedings of the Committee for Compounding, 1643-1660 [1643-6], 847. Bendish's diplomatic position is discussed in more detail in Mark Charles Fissel and Daniel Goffman, 'Viewing the Scaffold from Istanbul: The Bendish-Hyde Affair, 1647-1651', Albion, 22 (1990), 421-48. See also The Travel Diary of Robert Bargrave, ed. Brennan, 14-15, 18-22, 104.

<sup>43</sup> Canterbury Cathedral Archives, MS Lit E16, f. 77<sup>r</sup>, described in John Bargrave's own catalogue: '67. To hang upon my Cabanet. my/Owne picture upon Copper, in little/and in Seculo, between my Nephe/and my neighebor, draw'e at Siena, 1647. by the hand of Sig'r Mattio/Bolognini as written on the/back-side'. Bargrave commissioned another portrait of himself at Rome in 1650, again giving prominence to his family arms. See Bann, Under the Sign, 65-9, 113-15.

<sup>44</sup> Raymond, Itinerary, 50, 56-7. Raymond may have had Robert Bargrave in mind when he wrote (sigs. B4<sup>r-v</sup>): 'One of my Contemporaries [at Florence] discoursing with a Fryar, in a Complement protested he did reverence Clergy men for that he was the sonne of a Priest in England: which the Monke could not conster but either an Irony to his order, or Infamous to the Gentlemans owne descent'.

<sup>45</sup> The Travel Diary of Robert Bargrave, ed. Brennan, 17.

<sup>46</sup> The following leaf is also signed as 'A4', perhaps indicating that the preliminaries to the Itinerary, which were clearly intended to be controversial, had been censored in some way before publication. The volume was published by Humphrey Moseley (who had published the 1645 edition of Milton's Poems); and its licence had been granted by Nathaniel Brent, the Warden of Merton College, who in 1647 had presided over the notorious parliamentary visitation of Oxford University.

<sup>47</sup> Bann, Under the Sign, 107-111.

<sup>48</sup> Everitt, Community of Kent, 240-44, 249-50, 268-9. Bann, Under the Sign, 134, note 18.

<sup>49</sup> Calendar of the Committee for Compounding, Domestic, 1643-1660, Part III, 1878, 11 December 1648.

<sup>50</sup> The Travel Diary of Robert Bargrave, ed. Brennan, 13, note 3.

<sup>51</sup> Calendar of the Committee for Compounding, Domestic, 1643-1660, Part III, 2109, 18 July 1649.

<sup>52</sup> The Travel Diary of Robert Bargrave, ed. Brennan, 78.

<sup>53</sup> Ibid., 232, 235. Autobiography of Thomas Raymond and Memoirs of the Family of Guise of Elmore, Gloucestershire, ed. G. Davies, Camden Society, 3rd series, vol. 28 (1917), 30, 46.

<sup>54</sup> Ibid., 59-60.

<sup>55</sup> Pope Alexander, ed. Robertson, 23-4.

<sup>56</sup> John Bargrave was back in England in the spring of 1658 when he left London for the Continent in April, but it is not known if he was able to meet up with Robert before his departure. Pope Alexander, ed. Robertson, xii.

<sup>57</sup> HMC Finch MSS, I. 93; now at Leicestershire Record Office DG.7 (Box 4982). Robert Bargrave's eldest son, Robert, had died in August 1659, before his appointment as Secretary in Constantinople; and his only other son, Isaac, died in July 1663. See The Travel Diary of Robert Bargrave, ed. Brennan, 5-6.

<sup>58</sup> The Travel Diary of Robert Bargrave, ed. Brennan, 2-5.

<sup>59</sup> Pope Alexander, ed. Robertson, 6.

<sup>60</sup> Ibid., xii-xiii.

<sup>61</sup> This petition is printed in Pope Alexander, ed. Robertson, xiii, from Calendar of State Papers, Domestic, 1661-2, 394.

<sup>62</sup> The Oxinden and Peyton Letters, ed. Gardiner, 258, 9 December 1661. See The Travel Diary of Robert Bargrave, ed. Brennan, 12, for the later history of Bifrons.

<sup>63</sup> Pope Alexander, ed. Robertson, xiv-xvii, 138. Calendar of State Papers, Domestic, 1661-2, 488-90.

<sup>64</sup> See A History of Canterbury Cathedral, ed. Collinson, et al., 524, for this interpretation of Isaac Bargrave's memorial.

<sup>65</sup> A preliminary bibliography of Rycout's published works is given in Anderson, An English Consul, 294-6.

Essex Review: An Illustrated Quarterly Record of Everything of Permanent Interest in the County

Summary

Published 1957
E. Durant and Co., [etc.]

Key words and phrases

widford, lord abbot, gepp, saffron walden, hallingbury, broad oak, felsted, dialect dictionary, finchingfield, harold smith, pleshey, lands called, dunmow, fully appears, stansted, theydon garnon, orrin smith, chipping ongar, bridget hussey, earls colne

Buy this book

- Abebooks
- Alibris
- Amazon
- Barnes&Nobl
- Froogle
- Abebooks.co.
- Froogle UK

Borrow this book

Find libraries

Contents

Section 1	255
Section 2	256
Section 3	257
cellarer, hoggets, lambing
28 other sections not shown

Other editions

 Essex Review: An Illustrated Quarterly Record of Everything of Permanent Interest in the County 1957
N ILLUSTRATED | The Harv Horn in Fighting in Epping Fair: South Ockendon 40-1660 | the Evolution of the Grandfather Clock* JOHN FRENCH | Epping Fairs Markets...
Snippet view About this edition

Search in this book

byfrons

1 page matching byfrons in this book

Page 171

preserve it and the Zound.
18. Cosin Robt Bargrave died at his house Byfrons, near Canterbury in Kent.
Mr. Burman in Warwickshire, Mr. Barker in Rutland, H shiriffe, died this vacation.

Where's the rest of this book?

 Essex Review: An Illustrated Quarterly Record of Everything of Permanent Interest in the County 1957
Snippet view About this edition

 Essex Review: An Illustrated Quarterly Record of Everything of Permanent Interest in the County 1957
Snippet view About this edition

Quick Search

search tips
Advanced Search

Searching Family History > Wills

5 documents found

Displaying documents: 1 to 5

To see more documents try running a fuzzy search.

If you have too many results, try refining your search using the advanced search

Browse Categories:

 Family History

 Other Records

What's new?

FAQ

Contact us

About DocumentsOnline

Terms of use

PRO Catalogue

Scanning on demand

PRO home page

	Description	Date	Catalogue ref.	Details
	Will of James Bargrave	06 August 1662	PROB 11/308	View Details
	Will of Robert Bargrave of Patrixbourne, Kent	19 November 1658	PROB 11/283	View Details
	Will of Margarett or Margarete Bargrave, Widow of Saint Mildred in Canterbury, Kent	02 May 1655	PROB 11/249	View Details
	Will of Thomas Bargrave of Eastry, Kent	04 September 1654	PROB 11/234	View Details
	Will of Robert Bargrave, Gentleman of Doctors Commons, Middlesex	11 February 1698	PROB 11/443	View Details

Quick Search

Restrict by date

search tips
Advanced Search

Browse Categories:

Family History

Other Records

What's new?

FAQ

Contact us

About DocumentsOnline

Terms of use

PRO Catalogue

Scanning on demand

PRO home page

Image details

Catalogue Reference: PROB 11/96

Dept: Records of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury

Series: Prerogative Court of Canterbury and related Probate Jurisdictions: Will Registers

Piece: Name of Register: Wallop Quire Numbers: 39 - 81

Date: 07 June 1600

Description: Will of Robert Bargar, Yeoman of Bridge, Kent

Image contains: 1 will of many for the catalogue reference

Number of image files: 2

Image Reference	Format and Version	Part Number	Size (KB)	Number of Pages	Price (£)
12 / 382	PDF 1.2	1	1043	6	3.00
12 / 383	PDF 1.2	2	407	2	0.00
Total Price (£)					3.00

Restrict by date.

search tips
Advanced Search

Browse Categories:

Family History

Other Records

What's new?

FAQ

Contact us

About DocumentsOnline

Terms of use

PRO Catalogue

Scanning on demand

PRO home page

Catalogue Reference: PROB 11/283

Dept: Records of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury

Series: Prerogative Court of Canterbury and related Probate Jurisdictions: Will Registers

Piece: Name of Register: Wootton Quire Numbers: 575 - 626

Date: 19 November 1658

Description: Will of Robert Bargrave of Patrixbourne, Kent

Image contains: 1 will of many for the catalogue reference

Number of image files: 1

Image Reference	Format and Version	Part Number	Size (KB)	Number of Pages	Price (£)
438 / 1012	PDF 1.2	1	373	2	3.00
Total Price (£)					3.00

LONDON RECORD SOCIETY

1582 London Subsidy Roll Cornhill Ward

Sponsor: London Record Society

Publication: Two Tudor subsidy rolls for the city of London

Year published: 1993

Supporting documents: Abbreviations

Pages: 203-06

Citation: '1582 London Subsidy Roll: Cornhill Ward', Two Tudor subsidy rolls for the city of London: 1541 and 1582 (1993), pp. 203-06. URL: <http://www.british-history.ac.uk/report.asp?compid=36134>. Date accessed: 07 April 2006.

Bookshelf: Add this text to your bookshelf

Contents

CORNEHILL WARDE

Footnotes

CORNEHILL WARDE

273. [r.15] CORNEHILL WARDE

[Petty collectors: Morgan Rychardes, skinner, and Wyllyam Ryder, haberdasher.]

ST MYCHELLS ST CHRISTOFERS & ST MARYE WOLCHURCHE PAROCHES

[English]

	£	s.	d
Thomas Tyrryll (£70)	3	10
Wyddowe Wayght in landes (£15)		20
Edmond Pygott (£60)	3
Thomas Allyn skynner (£80) [x - Kent £1]	4
Bryan Caverley (£50)		50
John Harbye (£50)		50
Phyllypp Gunter (£300)	15
John Lute (£50)		50
Morgan Rychardes (£50)		50

96. A marginal mark (+) indicates that Levans was exonerated of payment in Cornhill ward, but I did not find a corresponding entry for this exoneration in the enrolled accounts, E.359/52.

---

<-- Previous:

[1582 London Subsidy Roll:
Cordwainer Ward](#)

Next:-->

[1582 London Subsidy Roll:
Cripplegate Ward](#)

---

copyright 2003-2006 University of London & History of Parliament Trust
Terms of use | Privacy policy | About us | Journal | Site map | Advertise with us

Roger Rygbye (£15)	15
Thomas Paradyne & John Paradyne (£40)	40
Edward Ryder (£5)	5
Humfrey Streete (£12)	12
Henry Ayleward (£12)	12
Davye Wythers (£3)	3
Wyddowe Boweyer (£10)	10
Luke Bedford (£3)	3
Thomas Smythe (£5)	5
Arnold Rychardson (£5)	5
John Jaques (£20)	20
John Thompson (£8)	8
Rychard Gylmore (£5)	5
Danyell Androwes (£10)	10
John Maskall (£5)	5
Thomas Lyllye (£5)	5
276. ST PETERS PAROCHE IN CORNEHILL
[English]
Thomas Pygott (£40)	40
Phillipp Jones (£50)	50
Thomas Gardyner (£60) [ass. £3 in Mddx.]	3
Gamalyell Woodford (£50)	50
Wyddowe Hylles in landes (£15)	20
Straunger
Waldron Pope (£10)	20
ST PETERS PAROCHE
Frauncys Lambert (£5)	5
Doctor Preyst (£10)	10
Theophylie Adams (£30)	30
George Gunbye (£3)	3
Rychard Hodge (£8)	8
Rychard Carlehill (£3)	3
Davyd Evans (£10)	10
Roberte Gunston (£6)	6
Rowland Rayleton (£15)	15
John Malyn (£3)	3
	115	7	8
[Endorsed] Summa	115	8	8

ootnotes

ist of abbreviations

Thomas Palmer (£5)	5
John Brokebanke (£12)	12
John Warner (£3)	3
Rychard Levans (£5) (fn. 96)	5
Robert Wyllcoxe (£3)	3
Wyllyam Shambrooke (£5)	5
Wyddowe Bales (£6)	6
Nycholas Nenton grocer (£5)	5
John Shambrooke (£3)	3
Rychard Marcam (£8)	8
Thomas Wythers (£3)	3
Gabryell Curtys (£3)	3
Hugh Sponer (£3)	3
Alexander Sharpe (£3)	3
Henrye Rychardson (£3)	3
Raphe Bynckes (£6)	6
Samuell Monger (£5)	5
[r.16]
Lawrence Caldwell (£10)	10
Thomas Holmes (£6)	6
Thomas Thornehill (£5)	5
Meredyth Hughes & John Cooper (£5)	5
275. Rychard Dodd (£10)	10
Wyllyam Browne (£40)	40
Edmond Jarvys (£3)	3
Ellys Some (£20)	20
John Nokes (£15)	15
Wyddowe Yomans (£3)	3
Robert Stephens (£10)	10
James Crucheley (£5)	5
Peter Hardlowe (£20)	20
Wyddowe Merrycke (£6)	6
John Marshall (£10)	10
George Dale (£12)	12
Anthonye Sodye (£5)	5
John Eldrydge (£5)	5
Thomas Foxe and Thomas Bruce (£6)	6
Edward Phillyppes (£3)	3
Robert Sallysburye (£3)	3
George Smythe (£6)	6
John Stephens (£3)	3
Israeli Owen (£6)	6

Edmond Aunsell (£80)	4
John Wheeler (£60)	3
Nycholas Fuller (£50) [ass. 20s. in Essex]		50
Edward Thorne in landes (£20)		26	8
Thomas Forman (£100)	5
Wyllyam Ryder (£70)	3	10
Rychard Milles (£50)		50
Gyles Crowche (£50)		50
George Kevall (£50)		50
Cornellys Corne estraunger (£10)		20
John Bull (£5)		5
Thomas Burdett (£20)		20
Wyllyam Chappman (£5)		5
Wyllyam Hamond (£6)		6
Rychard Maye (£3)		3
John Bowltinge (£8)		8
Thomas Porche (£5)		5
Thomas Evans (£5)		5
Edward Barbor (£25)		25
John Wythers (£15)		15
Nycholas Abraham (£3)		3
Wyllyam Flewett (£6)		6
Wyllyam Lanam (£10)		10
Wyddowe Luter (£3)		3
Rychard Saunderson (£3)		3
Thomas Fygge (£3)		3
274. Robert Westley (£8)		8
Thomas Stowe (£10)		10
James Cannon (£5)		5
Thomas Colfe (£6)		6
Nycholas Pudsey & John Ryddlesdon (£5)		5
Percyvall Burton (£3)		3
John Ryckeford (£3)		3
Thomas Doncaster (£6)		6
John Jones (£5)		5
John Gryffyn (£3)		3
Mychell Crowche (£5)		5
Wyllyam Keltrydge (£30)		30
George Hall (£3)		3
George Walker (£5)		5
Gylberte Godfrey (£3)		3
Cutbeart Creeckeplice (£3)		3

Robert Bargrave ~ 30
bachelier

général
+ Elizabeth Peyton
Bachelier, v. ~ 18

Father de
St Anna Cant.
10. 4. 1636

mail. uk. net
regroup

Uk @ 926 ce

ingrup.org
Fobsonius

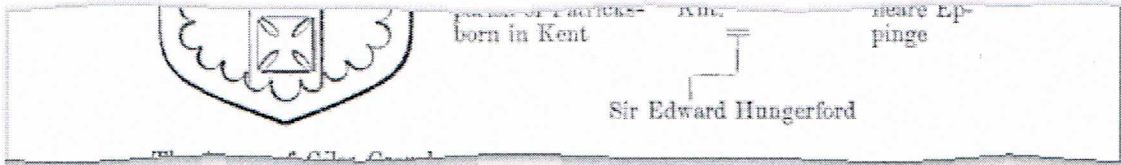

John Venn + JA Venn the boys' naturalisation papers...
 Cambridge U.P. 1913
 STB = BD STP = DD AB = BA AT = TA
 2-39 Isaac Bargrave (Bargrave) Dean of Exeter, 1615
 BA Lem 1606 MA 1610 DD Clare 1621
 John Bargrave Clare fellow - common Easter ter 1588 [Bergamo, 1609]
 John Bargrave BA Clare 1604/5 MA Trinity
 Thomas Bargrave Clare pensioner ~ 1596 BA 1599-1600; MA 1603 (in ardo); BD 1610 DD 1621
 James Bargrave Comptroller of the Exchequer Easter 1657
 John " Fellow of Lefehouse; pensioner last 1629/30; BA 1632; MA 1636
 " " Queens pensioner Easter 1654
 Robert " Clare pensioner last 1641/2
 Thomas " Peterhouse pensioner Easter 1655

« Back to Search results

Snippet view - Learn more

1 reference to bifrons kent in this book

Page 207

Where's the rest of this book?

Synopsis

Vol. 2 edited by Joseph Jackson Howard, 1883.

Related information

Web search for reviews of The Visitation of London

Other web pages related to The Visitation of London

Bibliographic information

Title: The Visitation of London

Publisher:

Author(s): Henry St. George, Richard Saint-George, Joseph Jackson Howard, Joseph Lemuel Chester

Publication Date: 1880

The Visitati of London:
Anno Domi
1633, 1634, and 1635.
Made by Sr
Henry St.
George, Kt.

By Henry St. Geor
Richard Saint-Geoi
Joseph Jackson
Howard, Joseph Le
Chester

Buy this book

Abebooks

Alibris

Amazon

Froogle

Abebooks.co.uk

Froogle UK

Find this book in a

Search in this book

bifrons kent