CITY OF CANTERBURY
KENT

(AREA OF THE FORMER RURAL DISTRICT OF BRIDGE - BLEAN)

The Reverend Richard Hooker, author of 'Of the Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity' and rector of Bishopsbourne from 1595-1600 is buried and has a memorial here. Attractive early C19 memorial plaque to John McDivitt, 1839. Stained glass some original glass in the chancel, also glass by Burne-Jones, and of the mid C16. Boarded wagon roofs by Scott, 1871. Carved tombstones in churchyard with cherubs and skulls.

2. L-shaped building which is all that remains of a large mansion built by Sir Arnold Braems in the late C17, the remainder having been demolished by John Taylor of Bifrons, Patricxbourne, between 1704 and 1729. Red brick. Brick pilasters flank each window bay. Bracketed wood eaves cornice. Brick stringcourse. Steeply-pitched hipped tiled roof. The north or entrance front has 2 and a half storeys. Two hipped dormers. Modern porch. Five windows, irregular, with mostly casements with wooden mullions and transoms, some small square leaded panes but two hung sash windows with glazing bars. Some of the windows at the east end are dummies and were probably blocked when sash windows were inserted in the east front. Rusticated stone doorway with keystone in modern porch. The east front has 2 storeys, attic and basement. Four windows and 2 hipped dormers, windows having glazing bars and hung sashes. The interior has unusual carved cornices in two rooms and two painted stone fireplaces.

with 3 smallholders have 10 ploughs. A church; 1 slave; 4 mills at 16s 8d; a fishery at 6d; pasture, from which outsiders have ploughed 6 acres of land; woodland, 4 pigs. Value before 1066 £18; when acquired, £10; now £19.”

A sulung defines the land worked by an eight-ox plough, including arable associated pastures, meadows, shaves etc. It approximated to the territory of a self-supporting hamlet., nominally 200 acres. (Arch Cant 109, 1991, pp 29-39: KP WITNEY: Kentish Land Measurements of the Thirteenth Century).

In 1914 the main road was not yet tarred through the village: a road of thick chalky dust. (Mrs Friend of the Red Lion) A hundred or two of London buses carrying troops. They thought the Germans must have put something in the dust to make everyone cough and sneeze.

1. Description; origins (Romans and pre-Romans)

British Camps (“oppida”) such as ‘Old England’s hole’ in Bourne Park on the Dover Road, are in close proximity to... these old (pre-Roman) roads. Three roads lead NW from Patricbourne Hill. . . The road on the left hand ascends the steep hill in the direction of Hardres, and passes through Whitehill Wood It leads to the ancient British camp in Iffin wood, where sunburnt pottery and other remains of clearly British origin have been found.. . . Caesar remarks that after defeating the Britons (on Barham Downs they retreated to one of their strongholds [perhaps in Iffin Wood?]) This road is known as the Kingsbury Road [past Flint Cottage- Tithe Maps]. [According to Mrs Friend, Kingsley Lane – she also remarks of a ‘mansion, in Gosley wood towards Kingston end.] What was the ‘Kingsbury’? May not this be merely Saxon for the British and Roman entrenchments this road passed through? They were supposed by the Saxons to be the ‘bury’ of a great king... the Saxons’ knowledge of the country they had conquered being notoriously weak. It is said to have terminated at Rutupiae and westward as far as Salisbury Plain It crossed the Dover Road on Bridge Hill, but., though it did not go direct to Canterbury It went to Bigbury [according to Detsicas: The Cantiaci Belgic Canterbury’s predecessor] The central road is now the main road between Dover and Canterbury. It passes through Bridge, near by being the site of a British Camp known by the name of ‘Old England’s Hole’, at which place tradition places the last fight the Britons made in opposing Julius Caesar’s advance in BC 54. [Third road goes up Bekesbourne Hill to Longport. Also another road ‘Pilgrim’s way’ which meets the last mentioned at St Martin’s hill. [Most of this based on Vine]: GP Walker: OLD ROADS IN EAST KENT & THANET, Arch Cant 38: 1926, pp77-78

Saxon Cemetery on Side Hill (in Patricbourne): 18-20 graves. Bourne Cemetery ?top of Star hill excavated by Bryan Faussett and Lord Londesborough [TG Faussett, MISCELLANEA, Arch Cant 6; 1864-5 pp 329-330]

Extended description of this excavation in Arch Cant 10; 1876 by TG Faussett. ‘We examined about a hundred in all.’

2. Saxon Remains
