

DUNKIRK EVACUATION RE-ENACTED FOR FILM

WAITING FOR THE SHIPS. The acted version by the troops on Camber Sands yesterday.
BELOW: THE REAL THING. The historic picture of British troops waiting in 1940 on the Dunkirk beaches before the ships appeared.

DUNKIRK RE-ENACTED ON SUSSEX BEACH. ABOVE AND TOP RIGHT: The realistic scenes at Camber Sands, near Rye, Sussex, where 4,000 troops re-enacted yesterday the evacuation from Dunkirk. The troops, together with hundreds of local people, were taking part in the filming of the Sir Michael Balcon-Ealing Films production "Dunkirk." The principal parts in the film are played by John Mills and Richard Attenborough.

SOLDIERS "BOMBED" IN RE-ENACTING DUNKIRK

4,000 TROOPS TAKING PART IN SCENES FOR FILM

DAILY TELEGRAPH REPORTER

Thick black smoke swirled skyward yesterday over Clamber Sands, near Rye, Sussex, bomb explosions hurled sand and pebbles into the air, sand muzzling, grime-streaked soldiers dived for cover. Another scene was being shot in Sir Michael Balcon's film, "Dunkirk."

For the beach scenes, Ealing Films had secured the assistance of 4,000 troops from the 3rd Infantry Division, under the command of Brigadier Bernard Fergusson, the commander of the division. Clamber Sands had been chosen because the beach was a narrow strip of land, and the sea was very rough. The beach was very narrow and the sea was very rough. The beach was very narrow and the sea was very rough.

18th CENTURY

C